Miller's Worm Powders are a prompt relief from the attacks of worms in children. They are powerful in their action and, while leaving nothing to be desired as a worm expellant, have an invigorating effect upon the youthful system, remedying fever, biliousness, loss of appetite, by worms in the stomach and bowels.

WOMAN GIVEN TWO DAYS

To Make Up Her Mind for Surgical Operation. She Refused; Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"One year ago I was very sick and I suffered with pains in my side and back until I nearly went crazy. I went to different doctors and they all said I had female trouble and would not get any relief until I would be operated on. I had suffered for four years before this time, but I kept getting worse the more medicine I took. Every month since I was a young girl I had suffered with cramps in my sides at periods and was never regular. I saw your advertisement in the newspaper and the picture of a woman who had been saved from an operation and this picture was impressed on my mind. The doctor had given me only two more days to make up my mind so I sent my husband to the drug store at once for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and believe me, I only took four doses before I felt a change and when I had finished the third bottle I was cured and never felt better. I grant you the privilege to publish my letter and am only too glad to let other women know of my cure."

GREECE'S YOUNG KING KNOWN AS A MOTOR SPEEDER

Alexander I. Whom the Entente Allies Have Chosen as Constantine's Successor, is Popular and None too Serious.

A sturdy college boy rather than a soldier is Prince Alexander I. whom the Entente Powers have raised to the Greek throne in place of Constantine.
It has been often said that according to the spirit of the age, Kings must be mere figureheads in the structure of a constitutional government. Provided there must be any Kings at all, and this is most probably what Great Britain and France were after when they selected the second son of Constantine to succeed him on the throne of Greece. Whether the selection was good or not, subsequent events will show.

Alexander was not prepared for the exalted position in which he found himself last Wednesday when the mighty combination of the Entente Powers gravely notified him of their decision to make him King of the Hellenes. It is likely that the Entente Powers have chosen Alexander precisely because they want a man who will have none of those things that his father insisted in carrying. Since Constantine ascended the Greek throne, and more particularly since he first objected to the participation of Greece in the war, the Allies have been convinced of the uselessness—and even of the harmfulness to their cause—of a King who took his royal duties rather seriously, and insisted on ruling accordingly to his own wishes instead of resigning to the way they declared to be constitutional.

From this point of view, Alexander appeared the ideal King of Greece to have in these troublous days. If he chooses to reign and to let others run things as his grandfather used to do, it is probable that he will keep his post unmolested both from within and without; if, on the other hand, he should follow in the footsteps of his father, he will shortly reach the point where he will cease to be a King.

A charming personality is this Prince Alexander, inclined rather to reading history than making it, paying more attention to his high powered automobile than to all the intricacies of international politics preferring the charming company of sparkling youth to the grave faces of the military critics. Alexander, of all the children of Constantine, comes first in the affections of his father, whom he loves dearly and admires openly. Of his mother, it can be said with equal frankness that she considered him a wee bit frivolous and far less martial than a nephew of the great War Lord of Potsdam ought to be. But Alexander has always succeeded in disarming Queen Sophie. He was the most lovable man in the whole palace and popularity enjoyed by his father and his brother George.

Except for an eyeglass, for which he and Prince George have a peculiar foible, Alexander might be taken for a Yale or Harvard boy, less addicted to the curriculum than to college sports. He likes any kind of sport, especially football and tennis. His particular hobby, however, is motoring in all its forms. He simply wants to drive anything, just as fast as he can; and he does it, too, in defiance of all the speed laws of the Athenian police, which is especially lenient to the popular Prince. One thing his father used to tell him often was that it would be impossible for Alexander to get a royal warrant of driver to his majesty the King. Neither the Queen nor her daughters ever entrusted themselves

FAMILY DOCTOR'S GOOD ADVICE

To Go On Taking "Fruit-a-tives" Because They Did Her Good

Rochon, P. Q., JAN. 14th, 1915.
"I suffered for many years with terrible indigestion and constipation. I had frequent dizzy spells and became greatly run down. A neighbor advised me to try "Fruit-a-tives". I did so and to the surprise of my doctor, I began to improve, and he advised me to go on with "Fruit-a-tives".
I consider that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives" and I want to say to those who suffer from indigestion, constipation or headaches—try Fruit-a-tives and you will get well".
CORINE GAUDREAU, 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

to the driving abilities of this princely chauffeur.
Once he was accused of running down and nearly killing an old woman who happened to cross the street while the Prince was coming along in his racer at the rate of some fifty miles an hour. After the accident the Prince promptly turned his machine around and became solicitous of her safety; incidentally he gave her some money and told her to come for more when she felt in need. Whereupon the old lady, who was more frightened than hurt, said:
"Your Highness, I thank you for your kindness, but I am all right."
Then Alexander grew angry and said:
"Now listen; you are all right, but I am not, neither is my machine. Certain parts of it were broken in running you down, which I could not duplicate in all Athens, and all this because an old woman like you, who ought to be home earlier than now, persisted in crossing in my way."
Last year, while driving to the royal villa of Decelia at a high rate of speed, he tried to avoid hitting a goat and the result was that his car struck a tree and was smashed. Its royal occupant broke a leg and miraculously escaped death.
While he was being bandaged that night at the palace he had his secretary cable to Italy an order for a new car of the same type as the one that was destroyed. He was dictating the details of the order when the royal surgeon came and examined the injured leg.
"How long do you think it will take my leg to mend?" the Prince asked.
"Oh, anywhere from three to four weeks," said the doctor.
"All right," said Alexander. "By that time my new car will be here."
He tried that vehicle soon after the four weeks were up, and the first thing he accomplished with it was to run over a little newsboy, whom he gave $200 right there on the spot.
"I am all the more sorry," he told the newsboy, apologetically, "because I like the press."
When the war began Prince Alexander was eager to read the details of the campaigns on the various fronts. He soon became tired of them, however, and once when he was asked to give an opinion as to the merits of the different belligerents, he said: "I don't know about the others, but O, Lord, the Russians are no good!"
And that was all he said on that occasion.

Incidentally Prince Alexander, was a Lieutenant in the artillery, and those closely associated with him found the young man an excellent officer. A curious thing about it was that Sophocles, the second son of Venizelos, was likewise a Lieutenant, not only in the same regiment, but also in the same battery with the Prince; more curious still, both were promoted to a Captaincy on the same day. The officers of the regiment, desiring to celebrate the promotion of the Prince, arranged a small affair with plenty of champagne and other accessories.
Then, however, a controversy arose. On account of an interview that King Constantine had given to the writer of this article, which was published in America, there appeared in the newspaper edited by Venizelos himself a vitriolic attack on the King. This, by some diabolical coincidence, happened on the very day when the officer's spree was to take place.
There was consternation in the regiment. "It is impossible to have the son of the King and the son of Venizelos at the same table," said the officer in charge of the arrangements. "But what is to be done? We cannot tell young Venizelos to keep away from the affair any more than we can tell the Prince to come."
At that moment, Alexander came in and solved the problem.
"I don't mind drinking a glass of wine with Captain Venizelos," he said, "and I wouldn't mind cracking a couple of jokes with him. If he were his father, and I mine, things would be different, but as it is I am not King and Sophocles Venizelos does not aspire to the Premiership of Greece."
The celebration was held and the two young men shook hands, to the delight of the whole regiment.
Such is Alexander, the present King of Greece. He came to the throne not at the bidding of his people, not as the lineal successor of his father, but simply because the Entente Powers so willed. His popularity will depend not on the amount of friendship and confidence that the Entente show to him, but on the message that his father will address to the Hellenic people, endorsing his son's nomination.

An Unknown Grave

The following lines were sent home by Trooper Otto A. Dunning, shortly after his brother Pte. Claud A., had been killed in action in Belgium:
Somewhere beneath the stars he lies,
Whom earth has taken to her breast,
Not even do our tear-dimmed eyes,
Behold where now he takes his rest.
No cross records his well-loved name,
No tomb in days to come shall tell
In golden letters of the fame
That crowned him even as he fell.
Yet he is here with us today,
A thousand things his touch reveal,
Sweet evidence, no numbing lay,
No unknown sepulture conceal.
In many a heart his grave is green,
And sweet with flowers we plant
Dear memories of what has been
