

Made for finest laundering, you can use this soap for everything

These snowy, crinkly Palmolive PRINCESS SOAP FLAKES were made for laundering the sheerest, finest fabrics...

For the foamy suds contains nothing that can possibly hurt the most fragile fabric, or dim the most delicate coloring...

But—best of all—it can be used for laundering everything! Because it is economical. Being pure soap—nothing else—it actually goes farther. It saves all clothing. And it cleanses efficiently.

So it is ideal for the washing machine, or for any household purpose.

If only to try, get some today—from your dealer. He has them in handy, one-pound packages, and in bars.

A Terrible Tragedy

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Few tragedies have shocked London society during the past few years as did the suicide for love of Angus Patrick Bowes-Lyon, cousin of the Duchess of York...

"I think what he says is a most dastardly thing to say, that Miss Parsons is not to blame and that my son was. That is a most cowardly thing, later the broken-hearted father apologized for this outburst..."

love with the girl? Mr. Bowes-Lyon who was deeply affected, "Yes, it became the whole of his life, and two or three weeks ago they became actually engaged..."

It was this observation that caused the broken-hearted father's outburst as given above.

er certainly was never intended for a missionary."

But my father, it appeared, had taken a fancy to a young engineer who was commissioned by the Chinese government to build a great bridge over a river far inside the country...

"I always trust you implicitly, why didn't you stop me? Father said most always not the best of his sister. He was the only one that ever did, and she both hated and adored him for it..."

NEW COMPLICATIONS Chapter 11

I did not get up for breakfast next day until Win had left for the office. Before I always was up to say goodbye at least, and his rare well kisses always started the day happily for me.

In retaliation, Win did not come in at tea time—though, as he had promised, Colin came. Win came in time to dress for dinner. We were dining out that evening.

So more time passed. I continued to play the same way he wanted it played. I went everywhere, danced, played cards, stood endless hours at stupid receptions, gave parties at my place, ordered handsome gowns, motored—and now and then found time to see Mrs. Anderson. The layette had been completed, and the baby, a girl was named Constance after me.

"She was an adorable child. I thought, blue-eyed and with the promise of golden hair. She was not a strong child, and her mother, efficient and clean as she was, did not know the best things to do for her. I began reading up on baby care, in odd moments when I was not eternally on the go, and at times when Win was not home."

"I called her 'my baby' and Mrs. Anderson did not resent the suggestions and directions I made about her. Sometimes, bundled up in the arms of her sister, the baby went for a drive in my car; the clear air did her good."

One day my aunt dropped in. She had spent most of the winter away and wanted me to go south with her, but I knew we could not afford it, so I had refused.

"I had a wireless from your father, he arrives tomorrow," she announced. "Tomorrow! I haven't heard from him—since—"

"You eloped." Aunt Harriet finished my sentence. "I haven't either, until a letter came this morning, an hour ahead of the wireless. It came on the boat ahead of the one he's on a slow one. Your father waited to take the fastest ship—trust him for that. He wired from the ship."

"He did not write me—"

"He did not know where you were. It appears he had started with a party going to interior China. I'm sure he was bored to death. It's two months through with on the boat, and then two or three more in strange little boats drawn up the Chinese rivers. They drag the boats along with ropes, they say, and they're usually full of missionaries—the boats, I mean."

"I'm sure I can't imagine what interest he has in interior China—our father..."

"My dear, I expect to dislike him enormously," he answered. "Harriet, your hat must be three weeks out of date. I brought over some things for you from Foligno. One can always trust her taste. Her prices have gone up, she dresses royally now, you know—"

In such fashion did my father's visit begin. So he expected to hate Winthrop! Would he, I wondered?
