FOR THE WOMAN READER

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not in figures on a dial.

Net is growing in fashion importance, approved by designers for entire dresses for evening wear as well as for bridesmaids. It is also important as a medium for blouses of shirtwaist frocks.

While black with white is still tremendously important in collections of daytime fashions, black with color is not to be overlooked, black with turquoise, for example, or with shades of fuchsia, also with red.

More and more attention is being shown to the two-piece dress, in cloth, lame and crepes, both in daytime and in afternoon and dinner types, the dinner or cocktail suit makes a big feature of lovely blouses tucked-in and overblouse versions both being approved.

METHODS OF COOKING VEGETABLES

The effect of cooking on the vitamin and mineral content of common vegetables has been studied by a number of investigators in nutrition and they have made interesting and valuable reports.

Experiments have shown that the method of cooking, the manner in which the vegetables are cut for cooking, the extent of surface ex-

How Fashionable Change in Women Dorothy Dix Fonders New Standards of Virtue

Way Back in Grandma's Day Ignorance, Fragility and Helplessness Marked the Most Desirable Girls—Today it's the Women Who Run a Family With One Hand and a Bridge Club With the Other That We Admire

It is queer how the fashion in women's virtues change as radically and inexplicably as do their fashion in clothes so that the good qualities that we thought they looked like perfect angels in when they were worn at one time, seem as funny and old fashioned on them at another time as bustles or chignons or even knee-high skirts would.

The ideal of maidenhood was a moron who grew up in a world in which all sorts of exciting and interesting things were happening without even wondering what it was all about and who at 20 still believed in Santa Claus and that you found babies in cabbage heads. She was never allowed to read anything that wasn't carefully expurgated and the more fool she was the more interesting she was esteemed.

Her long suit was being perfectly useless and hanging like a wet dishrag on any support that was handy. She literally enjoyed poor health. She had to have a strong masculine arm to lean on as she tottered around the garden. She swooned at the sight of a mouse, and spent most of her time reclining on a sofa in a state of semi-invalidism.

Can you hear anybody giving three cheers for that type of woman? Can you imagine any man wanting to marry that sort of girl? Nay, verily. Helplessness and silliness are just as much outmoded in women as are eighteen-inch waists and long, stringy curls. The women we admire today are the intelligent ladies who stand on their own feet, who pull their own weight in the boat and who can make a solo flight across the ocean if they happen to feel like flying that morning.

As for girls, you tell me what would happen to a prunes-and-prisms miss who couldn't discuss everything from birth control to the prohibition question and who couldn't swim or drive a car or put on her own tires or play a stiff game of golf. Sunk. That's what would happen to her.

Then think of what an example for her sex the domestic woman used to be. There was a time, and not so long ago, either, when the highest compliment you could pay a woman was to say that her whole world was shut within the four walls of her house and to call one a home-keeping woman was simply to pile the last bit of flattery on her that would stick. Men boasted that their wives had not been outside of their own yards for years, except to go to church or to do some necessary shopping or to visit the afflicted.

Women smirked self-righteously and said they never belonged to clubs or went to places of amusement or traveled or read the new books, they were so occupied with their housekeeping and they really had no interest outside of their homes.

Do we hold the human doormat up for emulation now? Not much. The 1920 model of domesticity is the up-and-coming woman who can run a family with one hand and juggle causes and clubs and society and contract bridge and whatnot with the other.

Then there was widely devotion. How beautiful we esteemed it for

HEARTS AFIRE

By MARY CHRISTIE

With imploring eyes and trembling lips she blurted out: "There's only one thing with my good name, Peter. It's a hard, suspicious world, and cruel to us women."

"What's the 'one thing'," he demanded. "That you tell the world that you and I are going to be married!" was the bomb she flung at him.

CHAPTER 56

UTTERMOST BELIEF

Prudence's father arrived at the hospital that evening, and the following morning took his daughter home.

Her nerves had been so shaken by the fire, and what preceded it, that she could put up no further fight, but quietly acquiesced in the arrangements.

"What else was there for her to do? Besides, although her father was rather reticent on the subject, her mother wasn't well, and wouldn't be better until the truant child came home.

"We need you, Prudence," said John Page, and for the first time the girl noticed how tired his eyes looked, and how seamed with lines was his rugged, simple, handsome face.

"After what happened, at Mrs. Vanstarr's, I feel as if I could never hold my head up again," breathed Prudence.

Her father patted her hand. They were in the train that was carrying them every moment nearer Green Gables, and the girl felt her courage ebbing.

"Your own conscience tells you that is wrong. You must face things out, my child. You must live them down, even if the real culprit isn't found."

Ah! that was cold comfort. A difficult philosophy.

Outside the windows, the meadowland was rushing by, the gorgeous glorious blaze of yellow in the hollows. Here and there, among the hedges, the first dog-roses were blushing warmly on their sprays, and soon the honeysuckle would be filling the air with perfume. Along the railway banks the yellow archangels and wild geraniums were in bloom, and long sprays of ground ivy, fox-gloves were steadily growing taller, soon to replace with purple the pretty blue of the hyacinth.

Despite her agitation, Prudence noticed all these things, lover of nature as she was.

And the beauty and the freshness of the countryside brought Peter and his love more keenly home to her.

She loved Peter Armstrong. Not even the painfulness of her present situation . . . returning to her home under a cloud, as it were . . . could really dim the joy that sang in her young heart like a trilling bird of spring.

Peter loved the country, too. Maybe tonight he'd come and see her, and together they would ramble through the beech-woods where the ferns uncurled their delicate fronds, and pause by the pool of water lilies, and explain to him that awkward scene with Traymore. The latter had taken advantage of her weakness to stage a stupid little tableau that to Peter must have looked exactly like a love-scene . . .

When Prudence and her father reached the end of the train journey, a lad who worked about Green Gables met them with a dog-cart, and away they drove.

And when the old house came in view, and then they stopped at the bottom of the old flagged walk, Prudence saw it all through a mist of tears, and darted up the path and into her mother's arms like a homing pigeon!

"My darling!" "Mother! I—I missed you so!" There was so much to say, to explain, Prudence poured into the ears that had never failed her, all the story of her flight.

Her mother, who was still weak from her brief spell of illness, trembled over the story of the fire.

"They tried to keep the newspaper away from me, but I found it, just the same. My darling, what an escape!" Prudence flushed and her lips parted with a tremulous happiness as she told of Peter Armstrong's visit to the hospital.

"He was so kind . . . so strong . . . so gentle . . ." The mother's eyes softened. And he'd never, never believe that wicked libel about the money they dared to accuse you of taking. You, my baby . . . of all people . . . A world of protective love was in the mother's voice as she

THE COOK'S CORNER Apple Porcupine 1 1/2 cups sugar 6 medium-sized apples 1 tablespoon fat 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon Blanched almonds Cream 2 1/2 cups water Cook sugar and water together for three minutes. Pare and core apples and cook them in syrup until tender, but not broken. Turn them frequently. Drain them and place in a baking dish. To syrup, add fat and cinnamon and continue to cook until quite thick. Fill cores of apples and surrounding space with syrup and stick the apples with blanched almonds lengthwise. Place in a hot oven, 450 degrees F., just long enough to brown the tips of the nuts. Cool and serve with plain or whipped cream. Servings, 6. Apple Pancakes 1 tablespoon fat 1 tablespoon sugar 2 eggs 1 1/2 cups flour 1 teaspoon baking powder 1 cup apples Cinnamon Milk Cream the fat and sugar, add beaten eggs, flour sifted with baking powder, and cinnamon, and finely-chopped apples. Then gradually add milk to make a medium batter. Bake on a griddle as for ordinary pancakes and serve in an overlapping row around a platter of pork chops or serve separately with roast pork, either hot or cold. Cooked apples or dry apple sauce may be used with batter in the same way. LONG GLOVES AGAIN Elbow-length gloves are appearing for daytime wear. They are made of softest suede, in pale beige and delicate shades, to lend a becoming and feminine note to afternoon clothes. This most becoming mode will be welcomed. It

Aerial Photography OTTAWA, Oct. 3.—The value of aerial photography in mapping is very graphically portrayed on the Kenora map sheet now re-issued by the Topographical Survey, Department of the Interior, on which the hundreds of islands in lake of the Woods are shown. These islands range in size from ten miles or more across to mere rock points jutting from the lake. By ordinary ground methods of survey the task of locating all these islands and crags would involve arduous labour and great expense, but the camera shows them all and by methods of plotting largely worked out and perfected by officials of the Department they are now shown in map form.

CANADIAN HERDS IN WELSH PORTS CARDIFF, Wales, Oct. 3.—(C. P.)—A determined attempt is being made to revive Cardiff's import trade in Canadian cattle and to secure a regular fortnightly service of cargoes into the port. During June a consignment of 540 beasts from Ontario and Saskatchewan arrived and most of them were sold by private treaty. Donald Munro of Montreal, who handled the business, said that Cardiff was finely situated to deal with this traffic and act as distributing centre not only for South Wales, but also for the Midlands and the south and west of England. At present the only extensive imports of cattle from Canada are those into Birkenhead and Glasgow. If the new venture succeeds, the ships bringing the cattle will be loaded with South Wales products for the Canadian market. Thirty million, sixty-two thousand, six hundred and ninety-seven Canadian hens last year laid 277,604,215 dozen eggs, valued at $36,596,415.

END THOSE HEADACHES Fruit-a-tives the quick, sure way For two years I suffered continually from dizziness, headaches, weak stomach and bad nerves. I was very run-down and discouraged. Nothing seemed to do me any good. I tried 'Fruit-a-tives' more by accident than design, and I certainly wish I'd taken them earlier. They made me feel so well and happy that I wonder now if I ever was sick. Fruit-a-tives . . . all drug stores

A Morning Smile

INNOCENT She must have been a fairly new hand in one of the Queen City's sandwich shops. Even that is hardly an explanation, for it sounds too incredible to be true. But we have the customer's word for it. He had ordered one of those three-decked sandwiches and beckoned the waitress. "I'd like some hot mustard please," he asked. The girl looked regretful. "I'm sorry, sir," she said, "but we only have cold mustard. Would that do?"

NOT MUCH A grouch had a son in McGill. At the end of the first year the son came home in high feather. He stood second in his class. "Second!" said the father. "Second! Why didn't you stand first? What do you think I'm sending you to McGill for?" The young man returned for his second year, determined to win first place. At the end of the year he went home and announced his standing to his father. The father looked at him a few minutes in silence, then shrugged his shoulders, and said: "At the head of the class, eh. Well, McGill can't be much of a university, after all."

is something to talk about after the many months when the shorter gloves were the only ones seen.

MAKES BREAKFAST A PARTY

"Breakfast is thrilling in our house since Mother started serving 'Grape-Nuts' Flakes. It's so good—so different." And indeed "Grape-Nuts" Flakes is temptingly delicious and new in flavour. It's nourishing too. Try a package. "Grape-Nuts" Flakes and its ever-popular companion "Grape-Nuts" Cereal are both made in Canada from Canadian wheat and malt.
