3 STRANGE MEN

By C. T. PODMORE

"Show me," returned Rumely in a sharp tone.

Barling waived that. "I want Miss Cordery," he said. "Where is she?"

"Miss Cordery? What should I known about a Miss Cordery? You won't find her here."

"That's a lie, Mr. ——." "What is your name here? Are you a Bristol crook? There's some link here, with these very strange associates; what are you doing in a hole like this? I'll root you out if this is your pastime. Come —no more playing for time."

There was the merest flicker of a sign from Rumely, and the man on Barling's right leapt suddenly.

In what way Barling moved was not noticed. But the bludgeon had lain this while to his sleeve and, without so much as a glance at the fellow, he struck a harrowing right side blow that dropped him to the floor. Then his left at short range shot to Rumely's jaw, and he stood up a bit, for a few moments upright and motionless as before.

The woman rose, trembling. "I knew it would come," she said; "I knew it."

"Don't worry," Barling answered. "Tell me where the girl is. You had better."

But the woman was afraid to reply. She saw Rumely lying ungainly where he had fallen, and the sight of her husband, in a sitting posture, with his lower jaw dropped, against the side of the doorway gave her another spasm of terror.

"You've killed him, have you?" she whispered.

"No fear. Be quick —where is she? Won't you speak?"

The woman only stared. Her husband's eyes were open, and it was obvious that she dreaded the consequences of an answer.

"Very well," said Barling. "I am going to lock you in while I find the girl for myself. If you don't want serious trouble, be quiet."

The woman made no sign that she even heard. While he locked the door upon them and threw the proper key into a corner of the landing, he heard her go to the window, lift up the sash, and call down to someone in the street.

He moved to the door of the next room. A locked door of any ordinary kind presented no difficulty to Mr. Barling. This one was open in a few moments. What he had need of was a flash lamp, but he struck a match instead.

By the dim light he made out the figure of Sophie Cordery standing by the foot of a bed. Her hands were wide from her body, which was drawn up defensively; yet she swayed gently to and fro, as if she were but half awake.

"Don't be alarmed," he said quietly. "How are you?"

"Who is it?" she whispered.

"Headley Barling. Hush. Have you got your things all right?"

"Yes, —I think so. I—"

"Don't bother now —come along. Very softly."

Barling did not forget to lock the door behind her, before guiding her carefully down the stairs. There was some shuffling somewhere —it was about the front door steps. He turned for the door that led below, secured it behind him —he had certainly the gift of precaution — and descended with his charge to the basement.

Through the grimly window he could see nothing against the area rails, but the shuffling still went on overhead; someone waited for the front door to be opened. A dull clamour elsewhere suggested an attempt of the occupants of the second floor to get free. This noise broke louder, and was followed by a running down the stairs. The front door crashed back, and feet returned rapidly upstairs.

Barling, opening the door, went up the steps to the level of the pavement. There was a taxi by the kerbstone; of course, that was how Rumely had come here. This was probably the one used for the decoy, and the driver of it a cognisant person, no doubt Mr. Barling signalled to Sophie, who joined him. He helped her safely into the cab. But he had barely closed the door on her when a cry sounded from the open window above, and from the front door Rumely and the taxi-driver rushed out.

Mr. Barling was a fast worker, and did not allow himself any undue excitement. If he must hit again, he would hit harh. He saw the driver go suddenly sky. But Rumely came on —leapt —and clung tenaciously from the step, reaching back toward Sophie as if to clutch her.

"It's my business," he panted. "She shall not get away. She's a listener. She——."

This would not do. Barling, one hand on the wheel, was dangerously cramped in his narrow space. His other hand shot out in sheer muscular desperation, and Rumely fell back to the pavement in the arms of the driver, but not a sound from Sophie, shrinking in her corner behind Barling.

The car, moving at first wildly, attracted the notice of persons in a wider street round the corner, who stood and watched it and shouted angry warnings. Barling drove on.

Outside a long row of shops in Commercial-road he drew up, came round to the door behind, and opened it on Sophie's vaguely wondering eyes.

"We get out here," he said "Are you feeling better?"

"Yes. But I'm not home."

"Not yet. You have been drugged, you know. Let me help you."

"No. I'll manage, I think."

"Come along, then."

But when she joined him on the pavement he did help her, and he walked her past the garish windows of the shops until she began to look bewildered, and he smiled in her face.

"That was not my taxi," he said. "I am going to get another and send you home. There's something you are supposed to have overheard, but you can tell Mr. Parmitter about that. He, too, is looking for you. I am just the lucky one. You really must be more careful, Miss Cordery, about getting into adventures like this."

She breathed some words of thanks.

A little further on Mr. Barling put up a hand to a passing taxi, and he accompanied her, almost in silence as far as the City. "Don't be too much afraid," he reassured her at last. "If I thought that fellow meant all he said I'd kill him. Or Mr. Parmitter would, I'm sure."

As he stood and looked after the departing taxi, Mr. Barling was fully aware that the episode should not have ended here. But he did not want to feel embarrassed by a too close familiarity on this ground of Sophie's rescue, and he did not seek to be told anything of the private affair that lay behind it, more George Parmitter had told him already about the stolen papers.

About the Only Way to Escape From a Lazy Wife is to Either Use Forceful Methods or to Abandon Them Entirely; There is no Law Governing Them

Dear Dorothy Dix—I want to ask you a very simple question. What can I do with a wife who is lazy and generally no-account, and who absolutely refuses to take care of her house or her children? I have been married for six years and we have two children. Married life for us has been a continuous warfare. I have to get my own breakfast in the morning while my wife sleeps. Every meal is an hour or more late. As a result I am losing my trade and perhaps my job. When we go to the theatre the play is nearly over when we get there. If we are invited out, we are always so late that our friends are dropping us. I neglect my business in trying to take care of the children. My wife does not put them to bed until nearly midnight and when I interfere she goes into tantrums. Nothing that I do pleases her. I am so miserable I would not live with her another day except for the children. What should I do? G. F. E.

Answer:

If you consider that the problem of how to deal with a trifling wife is a simple question, please don't ask me a hard one. To my mind it is the most unquestionable riddle in the world and I frankly admit that I do not answer to it.

It is a problem so great that even the law has not undertaken to solve it. We have edicts for dealing with the husband who fails to do his duty in the domestic relationship, but none for the wife who is a washout. A wife can get a divorce from a lazy, good-for-nothing husband who will not support her, but a man can't get a divorce from a wife who is too lazy and good-for-nothing to cook the food he provides and make him a comfortable home.

Why men put up with wives who simply lay down on their jobs and become parasites who suck the very lifeblood out of them is a mystery I have never been able to understand. Nor have I ever been able to understand why men do not get together and have a law passed that would make noncooking as good a reason for divorce as is nonsupport. So, after all, when I hear of a man who has to get his own breakfast and wash the baby's didies and wait for his dinner until his wife gets home from the movies with the delicatessen mess she has bought on the way home, my sympathy is tinged with a contempt one can't help having for a doormat.

It is human nature, especially is it woman nature, to trample over any one who hasn't backbone enough to stand up for his rights and who will meekly take any kind of treatment that is accorded him.

The only remedy for the indolent wife is force. If she knew that she was going to lose her job if she didn't keep her house clean, take care of her children and give her husband food, believe me, she would get busy with the vacuum cleaner, the baby book and the cookstove, for little as she likes domestic work she knows it is far easier and less exacting than pounding a typewriter or standing behind a counter. She knows she couldn't get by with the loafing in an office that she can do at home.

I doubt, however, if any treatment ever cures a lazy person or makes a dilatory one prompt. Maybe they have the hookworm. Maybe they have just an abnormal supply of selfishness and lack of consideration for other people. Anyway, I have never seen either a man or a woman who was born with a constitutional aversion to any form of labor galvanized into action. Nor have I ever seen a dilly-dallier speed up.

So I fear your chances of changing your wife are hopeless. She has no sense of fair play, or else she would recognize that marriage is a partnership and that it is just as much the duty of the wife to make the home as it is that the husband should make the living. She has not even any sense of responsibility for her children, because she is not willing to take the trouble to see that they get the proper food and rest. She has no love for you, or else she would try to make you happy and comfortable. There is literally nothing that the man with a trifling wife can do but to bear his affliction with what patience he may. No man is more entitled to the sympathy of the compassionate.

Dear Dorothy Dix—What do you think of a young man who is healthy, husky and well educated, but who for some reason can't hold a position (probably because he has a rooted aversion to work) and who is always borrowing money from his sweetheart? The girl works steadily, but makes a very small salary. Personally, I think he is not fit to be a doormat. What do you think? THE GIRL'S FRIEND.

Answer:

I agree with you. I don't think a man can get any lower than to become a parasite on a poor working girl and to use her love for him as the means of chiseling her out of her few hard-earned dollars.

He knows how hard she works, how little she gets, how she must deny herself the comforts of life to give him money. And, if he had any spark of manhood of chivalry in him, he would starve before he would take a cent from her. Yet there are plenty of cads like him, lazy loafers who never do a hand's turn of labor and who live by preying on women who love them. One of the oldest and commonest rackets in the world is borrowing money from women.

Why girls who have sense enough and know enough about business to hold down jobs fall for this sort of graft, only God, who gave women more heart than brains, knows. They let men wheedle them out of their pay envelopes and their life savings with a few soft words and a little petting, and they don't even know that when a woman lends a man money she kisses it and him both good-bye. For no other one thing kills a man's affection for a girl so quickly as to owe her money.

Dear Miss Dix—Is it safe and in good taste for parents to permit their 16-year-old daughter to go to public dance halls unaccompanied, or am I, the father, not modern enough? Is a 14-year-old girl considered sufficient as a chaperon to the above 16-year-old? PARENT-NEEDING ADVICE.

Answer:

No. Emphatically no to both questions. It is not safe or in good taste for any young girl to go a public dance hall without having some responsible older person go with her and look after her, because naturally in a public dance hall there are many men who are highly undesirable acquaintances for any young girl. A 14-year-old girl is no chaperon at all, because she knows even less about taking care of herself than the elder girl. DOROTHY DIX.

THE COOK'S CORNER

TOMATO CHEESE SALAD

2 tablespoons gelatine
1-2 cup cold water
1 1-2 cups tomato juice
1 slice of onion
1 bay leaf
1 cup tomato juice
1 cup cream or cottage cheese
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt to taste
1 cup whipping cream
Few pepper berries

Soak gelatine in cold water. Simmer the 1 1-2 cups tomato juice with onion, bay leaf and peppers 5 minutes. Strain and dissolve gelatine in hot tomato juice. Blend together cheese and the 1 cup tomato juice. Add Worcestershire sauce. Combine mixtures. Season to taste. When partially set fold in cream, whipped until stiff. Turn into large or individual "ring" moulds. Chill, unmould and arrange on beds of lettuce. Fill centre with chicken salad.

CROWN ROAST OR PORK WITH GLAZED APPLES

(4 to 6 servings)

6 pounds of loin pork
3-4 pound ground pork trimmings
6 slices of bread
1 tablespoon butter
1-2 onion
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
1-2 teaspoon salt
6 small apples
10c worth of red cinnamon candies
1 1-2 cups sugar
2 cups water

Have the butcher make a crown roast out of the 6 pounds loin. Take chopped pork, mix it with soft bread crumbs, parsley and chopped onion which has been sauted in butter. Fill cavity in centre of pork with stuffing. Bake about two hours in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) basting frequently. Peel and core apples. Make a syrup of sugar, water and candies. Drop apples into hot syrup, cook very slowly and watch carefully. When they are soft remove from syrup. Put pork on a large platter and garnish with apples.

FILET MIGNON WITH SAVORY SAUCE

(For 12 servings)

2 medium beef filets weighing 2 1-2 pounds each
1 tablespoon butter
2 cups clear soup stock
Flour, salt and pepper.

Season filets with salt and pepper and dust lightly with flour. Heat butter in large iron pan. Then brown the filets quickly on all sides. Turn in the clear soup. Cook about 20 minutes until tender. Medium done is best bet if you are out to please the men at your party. Remove cooked filets to large hot platter.

Shoulder Straps

Stretching shoulder straps on rayon slips, due to the weight of the material, may be avoided by sewing a piece of straight tape the full length of the strap on the inside. You will find that rayon straps will outwear several sets of ribbon straps.

Ironing Hint

It is not good practice to pile table napkins and handkerchiefs on top of each other after ironing. Spread them out on a piece of brown paper, or clean towel, and let them dry thoroughly before stacking them. This will cause them to look very much better and stay fresh longer.

Red Hair

A lead comb will subdue the fire of red hair and darken it harmlessly.

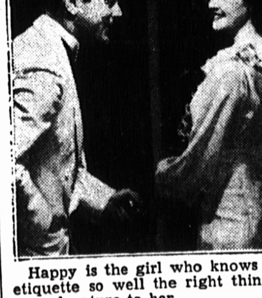
Be Sure! Don't Guess About Etiquette



Happy is the girl who knows her etiquette so well the right thing is second nature to her.

And what embarrassment's in store for the one who tries to guess her way! Over and over she betrays herself—in just leaving a room, for instance.

Chances are she'll never notice one of the men guests is about to open the door for her—as he should. No, she'll grab at the knob as he does—and he won't forgive her for making him look awkward, too.

If she knew her etiquette, of course she'd pause graciously, without thinking.

Then, what to say when an apology's called for? The girl with poise doesn't break into an emphatic "Pardon ME!" She says simply, "I'm sorry." Nor does she bound ahead of her escort down the steps. She follows him.

Be sure of your etiquette. Our 32-page booklet tells what's expected of you on all occasions; dining, dancing, visiting, travelling.

Q. How are godparents chosen for a new-born baby?

A. They are chosen from intimate friends of the parents.

Q. If a dinner guest drops a knife or fork on the floor, what should he do?

A. He should never pick up a knife or fork and continue to use it. If servant or hostess has not noticed the accident, he may quietly ask for another knife or fork.

The Housewife And Her Activities

Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right.
Pray if thou canst, with hope; but ever pray
Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness, if there be no light.

To remove gum or sticky flypaper from materials, take as much as possible off by scraping, then gasoline, carbon tetrachloride, or alcohol will remove the rest. Rain spots will come out if you sponge with clear, cool water or press the material under a cloth wrung out of hot water.

Dish-washing will be less of a chore, if cooking utensils are washed and put out of the way as you finish using them.

SHOWER SEATS

Built-in seats in shower cabinets are finding wider favor constantly in fine homes. They add greatly to comfort.

PAINT CAPACITY

One gallon of good paint, as it is usually applied to wood, will cover an average area of about 500 square feet with one coat, or 250 to 300 square feet with two coats.

OUTSIDE METAL

No corrosive metal piece of hardware should be used outside of a door or window. If rust sets in not only will the gadget affected have to be replaced but woodwork will also be rotted.

WALL PAPER SCRAPS

Don't forget to be around when the paperhangers is packing up after his work is done so that you can ask for some samples of the various papers he has used. It is the only way you will be prepared in case of an accident to the paper later on.

TO DYE OR NOT

It's all very well for the 25-year-old to say, "I'll never dye my hair," or "I think gray hair is beautiful and why in the world do women hate it?" But it is true that the day a woman notices that she has not just gray hairs, but gray hair there's an important decision to be made.

To dye or not to dye. That's the problem. And it's one to be weighed carefully. There are so many advantages and disadvantages on both sides.

In the first place, hair dyeing is a job for an expert—not an amateur. One should go to a very good beauty shop, put herself in the hands of an experienced operator, insist that the graying locks be dyed to match exactly the hairs that are not yet white. It is a mistake for a woman whose brown tresses are streaked with gray to have her hair dyed red, or black, or blonde. When the job is finished, her hair should be simply brown (as it once was) instead of brown and gray.

Only the most experienced operators should be allowed to put a permanent wave in dyed hair.

However, if a woman holds a job where a youthful appearance is an advantage, all of the trouble and expense involved may be very much worthwhile. Or if white hair makes a young woman look more like her husband's mother than his wife, she certainly is justified in dyeing it. Perhaps it doesn't. Perhaps it only serves to soften her features, makes her more attractive than ever.

Only she can decide. And if her decision is in favor of dying, she need never be ashamed to admit it. Any beauty routine that makes for a lovelier appearance and more happiness certainly is worth a trial.

CLOTHES CLOSETS SHOULD BE SUPPLIED AIR AND SUNSHINE

Have your clothes in the past suffocated?

This may seem a very strange question, yet we are now told that clothes, like human beings, need fresh air, light and sunshine.

Proper light and ventilation for wardrobes and closets have often been overlooked when a home is being built. Perhaps this happened when you built your house, but that's no reason why the defect should not be remedied during the coming summer months, when reconstruction and renovation work begins.

If a window cannot be provided in a closet....and there are very few closets in which a window cannot be built..the closet should be located as near to a window as possible. Then light and air can enter the closet and cheer up your clothes when you decide to leave the door open and give them an outing.

These are other ways in which a closet may be given an air entrance too. Perhaps a window may be built in the inside wall of a closet that connects with another closet while again, a slot may be cut in the bottom of the door. Sometimes small and ornamental air holes may be placed here and there in the door, while air conditioning, of course, is the most modern method of keeping clothes fresh and clean.

And speaking of clothes, and being well dressed, don't forget to keep your home well dressed, too. Outside, of course, it will likely be of a character to disarm criticism from the most fastidious, but what feeling does the inside impart to your guests?

There can be nothing more depressing to friends who drop in than to enter a hall or reception room that is little more than dingy, confining tunnel. The size does not matter so for it is the colors you have employed in its decoration that will have everything to do with the feelings of your visitors.

For many years, light shades have been very popular, and what better place is there to utilize a pure white enamel than in the hall for woodwork and stairway, using brown mahogany for the stair treads and top rail? An entry to this type of hallway, no matter what the weather or season brings gay cheer with its beauty and radiant hue.

First impressions are usually difficult to dislodge, and in the hallway your friends will almost instinctively get the mood that will dominate while they remain with you. Let them get that gay, friendly feeling the moment they enter. Spring and summer is the time for painting and remodelling. Let's get started.

FORMER ACTRESS IMPROVING

PARIS, July 25—(CP Havas)—Pearl White, film star of the pretalkie days who has been suffering from a cardiac attack in the American Hospital at Neuilly will be well enough to leave the hospital in three or four weeks, physicians said today.
