Cuban President Speaks At Rotary Convention

Dr. Federico Laredo Bru, speaking on Sunday evening, June 9, at the closing session of Rotary's 1940 convention, officially attended 5,000 Rotarians and guests to Havana and Cuba. The response was made by Dr. Walker D. Head, president of Rotary International. The addresses were followed by a musical concert.

The first general session of the convention was held on Monday morning, and was highlighted by the address of President Head, discussing the subject "Rotary, Present and Future." Dr. Head pointed out the growth from a single club (Chicago) in 1905, to its present day status—more than 5,000 clubs in approximately 60 countries, with a membership in excess of 1,000,000. In reference to the status of international relations, President Head said: "It is perhaps beyond the competence of mere man to quench this all-consuming fire which today threatens to reduce the world to ruins, despite the fact that man must be charged with this gargantuan task. We take solace, however, in the thought that the fires of hate and destruction must, of their own accord, burn out. Then will come a period of reconstruction—a mass endeavor to restore the world to a state of normalcy and peaceful existence. It is at that time, perhaps even now, when organizations such as Rotary, organized on these principles of policy, procedure and action are the very ingredients necessary for tranquil existence, can do much not only to heal the wounds and repair the ravages of war, but also to remove conditions to which war is directly attributable."

On Monday evening, in the stadium of the University of Havana, Rotarians and guests gathered to enjoy "The Cultural Society of Cuba," a program which offered numbers by the Choral Society of Havana, the Havana Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Military Band, and also a dance number. The entire program presented from a beautifully lighted and decorated stage located in the center of the huge stadium.
