Arctic Camp Relics Are Well Preserved

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Sept. 15. (By The Canadian Press)—The remarkable preserving qualities of ice are once more evidenced by a recent report from a Swedish Arctic expedition, headed by Professor Ahlman of the Stockholm University, after many months cruising on the "Quest" in the icy waters between Spitzbergen and Novja Zembla.

The men from the "Quest" at the abandoned camp found a damaged tent, a Polar sleep, a photographic apparatus, a silver watch, a hip-flask, a Primus stove and various other objects, all remarkably well preserved by the ice, so much that the watch when drawn up at once started going. The photographic camera was not damaged. A pocket-book, besides Italian and Norwegian bank-notes, contained photographs and hastily penned notes, which still were decipherable. The life rope was as strong as if it had been bought yesterday. All these finds are now on board the "Quest" and will in due time be restored to their rightful owners.

The "Quest" tried in vain to discover traces of the Noble expedition.

At a general meeting before the commencement of the actual deliberations some of the international representatives were invited to address the delegates.

OSBORNE, Kans., Sept. 15.—(U.P.)—A sow on Robert Hodson's farm near here is helping Hodson weather the depression. She recently had a litter of 20 pigs. Last year she had 17.

DELTA, Colo., Sept. 15. (U.P.)—B. R. Laskowski, weather forecaster at Topeka, Kan., is a great aid to his wife, especially in the performance of her domestic duties.

If, on Monday morning, he says to Mrs. Laskowski: "Watch out for rain today," Mrs. Laskowski postpones her weekly washing.

In the winter time, the forecaster may say: "Snow tomorrow." That, declares his wife, is a signal for hot soup.

The Laskowski home also is a sort of barometer of domestic planning in their neighborhood. If Mrs. Laskowski hangs out her clothes early on a Monday morning, the other wives know the weather is all right and out go the clean clothes.

The Laskowskis vacationed near Delta this summer.

Is One-Half Your Income Insured? " " "

YOU wouldn't care to live on less than one-half your present earnings, would you? Neither would you want your family to struggle along, alone, on any smaller amount.

That is why it is wise for you to insure that at least one-half of your income will continue. You can do it easily and economically by investing only a few dollars in Life Insurance.

For example, if your earnings are $44 a week—you should own Life Insurance sufficient to yield a weekly return of at least one-half that amount.

That would mean protection for your wife and family—or, if you live, provision for your own old age.

Consult any Life Insurance representative and he will advise you how you can insure one-half your income. You will find the outlay is very small compared to what it offers in peace of mind and security against the future.
