WOMAN AVOIDS AN OPERATION Hope Nearly Gone, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her

Star, N. C.—"My monthly spells gave me so much trouble, sometimes they would last two weeks. I was treated by two doctors without relief and they both said I would have to have an operation. I had my trouble four years and was unable to do anything and had given up all hope of ever getting any better. I read about your medicine in the 'Primitive Baptist' paper and decided to try it. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for about seven months and now I am able to do my work. I shall never forget your medicine and you may publish this if you want to as it is true."—Mrs. J. F. HUNTER, Star, N.C.

MR. MERCHANT!

Ever go hunting? Ever throw your arm over your shoulder on a crisp morning and go afield for furry and feathered game? Wasn't it a great delight to hear the whirr of wings or see a glint of fur between the tangle of the underbrush, to sight along the barrel until you had a line on your quarry, press the trigger and—find you hadn't loaded your gun! Every day during 1921, Mr. Merchant you will be hunting—out gunning for customers. Your ammunition is your stock. Your gun is the Guardian. You will often draw bead on your quarry—a customer. Are you going to forget to load your gun and disappoint yourself? Naturally you want to do a big business in 1921. But the first requirement is to have somebody to do business with. And successful business men, those who have applied the acid-test know the only way to have customers is to let folks know what you have for them by persistent and not spasmodic advertising. This is no age to argue: Does advertising pay? It has proved to both big and little stores that it does pay. The man who makes it pay is the man who is big enough to look ahead for better business, instead of keeping in the same rut year after year. Behind every business that keeps up with the times is an individual who keeps ahead of them. The merchant who lets himself believe that Guardian advertising won't pay him is virtually saying: "My business is big enough. I don't want any more!" If you want less business keep quiet—you'll have it! But this is no time to throw business away. You need it. Judicious advertising in the Guardian is the most satisfactory way to get it. Then Prince Edward Island folks will migrate to your door as naturally as the birds fly south in winter. But it's up to you. Are you going to hit the target in 1921? Or are you going to plod along? The Guardian is ready and willing to serve at your command. It can help you. Resolve that you will command it and give it a fair chance to prove that it can build you a bigger and better business than ever before.

CLOSING OF DEBATE IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 3rd, was a field day in the House of Commons, when it was decided to devote to the crucial question of the present session, namely: Has the Melgish Government lost the confidence of the electorate, as reflected in the course of their representatives, or has it such a backing as warrants its continuance in office for the rest of the Parliamentary term and the passage of an equitable Redistributive Bill? The answer has been emphatic and unmistakable. The Government's position is unassailable, and it can rest assured that its duty, as expressed by the elected of the people from every part of the country, is to "carry on" and provide such re-distribution as shall give to unrepresented territories in Canada the membership to which they are entitled by population. The House met at three o'clock. As it was generally understood that the Government had determined to put the question to the test that night—there has been an unfounded rumour that the Prime Minister would speak to the sub-amendment of J. A. Campbell, of Nelson, and thus precipitate another oratorical discussion led by King—and as there were numerous speeches in the programme members were fully prepared for an all-night session. The political atmosphere turned out in full force, the Speaker's gallery being graced by the presence of an unusually large number of the fair sex, who must take a lively interest in the legislative affairs of their country when they can sit silent from 8 o'clock in the evening until break of day. Of course, a large proportion of them were the proud possessors of the speech-makers—which being the case their vigil would need no other stimulant than the anticipation of the particular performance in which they were especially interested. Some of the ladies, it is true, did feel the need of something more substantial than eloquent breeze, but then the Parliamentary Restaurateur had strict orders to keep his staff at the instant service of midday. A division in the House of Commons is an event that always has at least one merit—it is spectacular and entertaining; and when the question before the house is one of great desiderata, there is added the element of excitement. When a Government is flush of support and its Whips may take things easily, complacent in the assurance of a wide margin of safety, there is of course little interest in a division, so far at least as the public is concerned. And after the debate has afforded both sides all the opportunity they can desire in order to place their views squarely before their constituents and to make what capital they can for election purposes, then even honorable antagonists themselves are weary if not indifferent. But when there are rumors of secession from the ranks of ministerial support, when partisan press correspondents have canvassed the situation and with the sublime cocksureness of the false prophet, predict a near defeat for the government; when Opposition leaders refuse pairs, not so much because they resent the tenacity of their opponents as because they think it precarious which they are on the qui vive and transmaney is high treason;—in short, when the government is in danger, real or imagined, then excitement runs high. At such a time the combative spirit is unusually contagious, and what with wives, daughters, relatives and other admirers of vain glory, there is not even "standing room only" in those sections of the galleries where that undignified posture in grudgingly overlooked by the rigid Sergeant. Every division of consequence occurs at night, and from long-established custom the vote on the Address, as on the Budget, is staged for dawn. (To take it at midnight and go home to bed might perhaps be rational but it would certainly not be human.) And so the motion of Mr. James McIsaac, of King's Prince Edward Island, was not put until a jaded House the Opposition, official and some-cob's-witty if not weighty, and after midnight the speeches were almost entirely confined to the Opposition, Mr. Jean Denis, of Joliette, speaking for the first time in French (his native tongue) since his coming to Parliament, having occupied considerably over an hour. But however interesting the speeches may have been to the speakers themselves, their effect on the press was deadly soporific, and only inexcusable duty kept Hansard on the job. But then the men of Hansard are indefatigable,—in which respect they differ from other human beings, including members, who generally on such occasions sleep in their places. Shortly after 4 a. m. Mr. Speaker (without a division) declared the sub-amendment of Campbell asking for an adjournment, re-distribution, and an appeal to the country this year. (The mover and seconder were both absent when this amendment was put to confidence amendment was then read from the Chair and Mr. Speaker asking for the "yeas" and "nays" the opposing forces thundered accordingly. The division bell then being started, French members began to roar the Opposition's stock chanty, "Alouette, gentille Alouette", which Government supporters answered with an equally vociferous rendition of their favorite: "Pack up your troubles!" The stray sheep having been all rounded up and gathered into their respective folds, on division the amendment was defeated by a Government majority of 25—Gauthier, former Liberal and Major Andrews, independent Progressive, voting with the Government. Mr. Guss Porter of Belleville, Ontario, representing the constituency of Hastings, a very popular figure in Parliament, was determined to show his confidence in the Government and, although in hospital, came to the House, with the aid of two other members, and recorded his vote. Mr. Porter was enthusiastically cheered. Naturally the applause from the Government benches was loud, although it was well within the bounds of moderation; for the Ministers of the Crown bore their triumph with dignity. But if the Government were calm in the success of the occasion, the same cannot be said of their lustrous supporters, whose demonstration was long and thunderous, many gentlemen making rather free use of their desk-tops to supplement the volume of vocal expression. One can hardly censure them, however; the prediction of the Liberal leaders, echoed and re-echoed ad nauseam by the small fry of the Opposition, that the Government would fail to muster a majority of ten, was so completely falsified. The Opposition had reckoned on a wholesale exodus from the Unionist benches, and the result of the vote only shows what extravagant predications seenational press agents make in their effort to embarrass the Government. Mr. McIsaac's motion, that an Address be presented to His Excellency, the Governor General, was then declared carried on the same division reversed.

And now for the part played by the province of Prince Edward Island in this momentous debate. That the Prime Minister's choice of Mr. James McIsaac for the honorable task of moving the Address, a motion on the disposal of which it was well understood would depend the Government's immediate course—was a wise one wholly justified by events, has been evidenced not only in Mr. McIsaac's own distinguished ability, but in the eulogies, general and unstinted, which have been bestowed upon him in the House. Congratulations to the mover of the Address are usually only a mere polite formality. But in Mr. McIsaac's case—if commendation comes from such the excellence of his achievement did not speak for itself—the high and discriminating sources that I cannot be questioned. To have won the sincere approbation of the Prime Minister is a matter of just pride; and when a member of the House of Commons is complimented by Dr. Michael Clark—especially an opponent on the floor and the brilliance of his address, he has indeed passed with the approval of the ablest orators and most effective debaters in the House, hall from the home of Parliamentary oratory. And when it is remembered that he is invariably very sparing in his bestowal of bouquets, his warm appreciation of Mr. McIsaac's accomplishment is fully significant.

Mr. Melgish is regarded, and justly so, as having on this occasion evidenced due consideration of the rights of a province which has every reason to rally with a hearty unanimity to the support of his Government. While no doubt he selected Mr. McIsaac largely because of the talent he has displayed since his advent to the Commons three short years ago, it is nevertheless unquestionable that the Prime Minister is anxious to assure the little province by the sea that he will be zealous in the advocacy of her cause as was his predecessor, Sir Robert Borden. This was the opinion expressed by some of the leading journalists in the lobbies when it became known a few days ago that Mr. McIsaac would move the Address, and the general feeling in the capital today is that Prince Edward Island, recognizing as unambiguously as must the ready generosity towards her that characterized the administration of the late Prime Minister and the equally liberal support upon which she may clearly depend from her successor, cannot, when the time comes, fail to show her appreciation in the only adequate manner possible, by returning to Ottawa a solid phalanx to urge her cause upon the only sympathetic party from whom she has reason to hope or expect favors—the National Liberal and Conservative Party.

CUPS AND MEDALS—In the window of "The Toggery," South side Queen Square, are displayed the splendid medals donated by Mr. G. L. Prowse to the members of the winning team in the recent Church League Basketball competition, also the cup donated by Mr. A. A. Pomeroy to the winning team and the cup donated by Col. W. B. Prowse to the Trail Rangers.

THE SIGNALLER'S CLASS—The re-organized Signalling Co. opened on Tuesday night with a splendid attendance. Sergt. Kemp, in of the Canadian Permanent Signalling Staff was very well pleased with the fine class of men attending and under his guidance they are already rapidly attaining efficiency. The company still has room for a large number of men and any bright boy who has an ambition to learn signalling and telegraphy should make application to Major Keith Rogers at once so that he may perform his annual drill and receive pay therefor.

CHARLOTTETOWN PRIZE WINNER—Mr. O. C. Craswell, photographer of this city, is receiving congratulations upon being one of the prize winners in the recent exhibit of pictorial portraits in Boston. The exhibition was open to the world, and the portraits were hung in the Salon, sixteen hundred in all, from studios in every state of the Union, as well as from European countries, including Great Britain, Switzerland, Austria, etc. Mr. Craswell received the twelfth honorable award out of the sixteen hundred. This is highly creditable to the Charlottetown artist, who is becoming widely known as the maker of pictorial portraits and a photographer of individuality.

Two Assassinated In Chicago Feud CHICAGO, March 10—A reign of lawlessness, declared to have been the outcome of a political feud which has terrorized one of the most densely populated wards in the city for weeks, today culminated in the assassination of two of Aldermen John Power's political lieutenants. Paul Labrida, a municipal court bailiff, was the first victim. He was shot from ambush a block from his home. He fell with nine bullets through his back. Harry Raymond, a cigar store owner, was killed later by two men who had entered his store to buy cigars. Two bullets pierced his head and two others penetrated his lungs. Both shootings took place in a section known as "Death Valley" in the nineteenth ward and were described by the police to the fued between the Power's faction and that of Anthony O'Andrea, who was defeated by Power for alderman last month.

Stevens Murder Case EDMUNDSTON, Mar. 10—William St. Pierre, charged with having murdered Minnie Stevens on October 11 last was brought into court this morning for trial, he having pleaded not guilty on arraignment yesterday. He showed none of the nervousness today that marked his demeanor yesterday when brought to hear the indictment read.
