FUTURE "EMPEROR OF GERMANY" AGED SIXTEEN OVERGROWN AND ANAEMIC

The Nationalists Are now Swinging Round to General Ludendorff's Choice of an Eventual Ruler for the Reichstag who May Be the Eldest son of Princess Hermine.

(Associated Press)

BERLIN, Sept., 6.—German Nationalists are swinging around to Gen. Ludendorf's choice of an eventual ruler for the Reich. He is Prince Hans Georg Heinrich Ludwig Friedrich, Herman Ferdinand Von Schoenaich-Carolath, eldest son of Princess Hermine, the ex-Kaiser's wife.

The Prince is 16, overgrown and anaemic. He lives with a court staff at his castle, Antitz, in Upper Silesia. Several months ago his mother took him from the Ritter Academy, where German nobility is taught, and established him in the castle in a manner befitting his position and his mother's aspirations.

Those who know the boy intimately declare he is inordinately fond of candy, which he eats in enormous quantities, despite his doctor's injunctions. His personality is that of the average spoiled boy and he is not distinguished in any way.

Hermine has set her heart on her son's becoming Emperor of Germany, and has been drilling him in the duties of a monarch. Court attendants at the castle address him as "Your Majesty," but the lad himself is said not to take the title seriously.

Legends are already afloat about his prowess, wit and sagacity. But reliable information indicates Ludendorf is choosing a weak character that he can use as a tool for his ambition.

The Mail and Empire correspondent talked with the young Prince at Nurenburg, but the most he would say was that the Fascisti parades, the weather, the speech es, the people and everything else were "nice."

Former Crown Princess Cecile is reported to be much disturbed at Ludendorf's choice. She believes her children should be summoned to the throne. She and Hermine are bitter enemies, chiefly because of the conflict as to whose son shall be under Ludendorf's thumb on the throne of Germany—if the hopes of the Fascisti are realized.

Terribly Burned When Wax Ignited Parafine

(Canadian Press)

YARMOUTH, N. S. Sept. 6.—Mrs. Shenton B. Allen, of Yarmouth North was terribly burned this afternoon when a pan in which she was melting parafine wax boiled over on the stove and burst into flames which ignited her clothing. Rushing into the yard a mass of flames, Mrs. Allen attracted the attention of neighbors who extinguished the fire with mats and blankets, but not before she was badly burned from head to foot. She was taken to the hospital in a critical condition.

MAY BE RELIEF PARTY SEARCH FOR TORONTO BOY

TORONTO Sept. 6.—Efforts are being made to secure the co-operation of the Siberian government in ascertaining the fate of Allan Crawford, the Toronto boy, and his two companions who started asross the ice from Wrangel Island in January of this year and have not been heard of since. John Anderson, secetary of the Stefanssen Arctic exploration and development company, said today, that a cable had already been sent to Mr. Stefanssen instructing him to make the necessary arrangements. Up to noon Professor J. T. Crawford had received no direct word from Harold Noice respecting the tragedy that befell his son.

From V. Stefanssen, sponsor of the ill-fated Arctic expedition, however, who is now in England a cable expressing condolence has been received by Prof. Crawford. Stefanssen's message reads "Deepest sympathy over terrible news. Stefanssen.

Despatches quote Stefanssen has expressed slight hope that Crawford and his two companions may yet turn up alive. The distance from Wrangel Island to Mainland is about 110 miles and could be covered in less than three weeks, but there would be 700 miles or more still to be covered before the party would be in touch with the world.

Sir Edmund suggests that a re- been associated with Stefanssen in the polar expeditions of the explorer and has given him considerable financial assistance, says that he has not given up hope of finding the little party alive. He suggests sending search parties to the north in an endeavor to locate them.

"The most logical way," said Sir. Edmund, "would be to send two parties, one to the south east coast of Siberia and the other to Nome, Alaska both to work towards Wrangel Island."

Sir Edmuund suggests that a relief party should be organized in Toronto and supported by public subscription.

TO BEARD NATION IS SOCIETY'S AIM

PARIS, Sept. 6.—A new terror, according to a telegram from Prague, is to be added to life in Czecho Slovakia.

A society has been formed to induce all citizens of the republic to grow beards.

It will shortly hold a conference at which speakers will appeal to Czech history to show that during the most glorious epocks, the national chin was always amply adorned. "Spinach" beards will soon be the rage again.

DIED SUDDENLY WHILE HARVESTING

CHATHAM, N. B., Sept. 6.—The body of Robert Wilson, who died last Thursday at Lampman, Sask., arrived here this morning, and was taken to the home of his father, Harry Wilson, Napan. The funeral will be held there tomorrow. Wilson left here last month on the harvest excursion and while working on a farm out there was suddenly stricken with an illness which proved fatal.

In Loving Memory of
JOHN H. McKAY
Killed in Action Sept. 7th. 1916

Lord Lovat and The Clan Fraser

Lord Lovat, titular head of the Clan Fraser, who is presiding over the Forestry Conference at Ottawa, is not paying his first visit to Canada. He was one of the most striking figures in the entourage of King George V., then Prince of Wales, at the tercentenary celebration at Quebec in 1908, and his commanding physique and handsome countenance made him a marked man even in a gathering which included such Empire notables as Lord Roberts and the late Duke of Norfolk.

Major-General Simon Joseph Fraser, fourteenth Baron Lovat, K. T., K. C. M. G., C. B., K. C. V. O., C. V. O., D. S. O., has had a distinguished public career. He raised two regiments of Lovat's Scouts, the first at his own expense, the second with some assistance from friends, for the war in South Africa, in which these units rendered much valuable assistance. He did much to help in the organization and working out of the Territorial system under the scheme of Lord Haldane, which was found so useful in the recent war. For the great war itself he reorganized Lovat's Scouts for active service, and afterwards went to Gallipoli and narrowly escaped with his life from sickness contracted there. On recovery he served in France, later having complete charge of the Forestry Corps. He received in 1014 the highest distinction that can be conferred on a Scottish nobleman, the Knighthood of the Thistle. He also received many military and civil decorations. Personally he is a charming cultured and widely-versed gentleman who will leave behind many friends in Canada when he departs.

First in the Field.

In his raising of armed forces to fight the battles of his King and country, Lord Lovat was but following a family tradition which has persisted for centuries, for the Chief of the Clan Fraser was always one of the first in the field when his liege lord required the aid of arms. One of the most renowned of the line was Sir Simon, known as "the Patriot," who was the coadjutor and compeer of William Wallace, and one of his immediate descendants married the sister of King Robert the Bruce, the family thus being intimately affiliated with both of Scotland's greatest national heroes. The family fortunes suffered eclipse in the person of Simon, Lord Lovat, who at the age of 81 was beheaded in 1747 for complicity in the Jacobite cause in the rising of "the '45." Many of the accusations which blackened his memory have since been shown to have been the inventions or exaggerations of his enemies, and even were they all true, they have been amply atoned for by his children's children. The title was attainted and the estates forfeited to the Crown, and neither were restored until the nineteenth century was well advanced, Simon's son, the Master of Lovat, had borne arms with Bonnie Prince Charlie, but was pardoned on the ground that he had acted under his father's influence, and in 1757, in accordance with the conciliatory policy of Pitt, he was authorized to raise a regiment of Frasers, of which he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel.

The Fraser Highlanders.

This splendid body, destined to have a unique connection with Canadian history and to leave its impress upon the population of the country which was later to become the Dominion, was known in the Army List as the 78th Regiment, and won renown not only for its military prowess, but for the exemplary character of its members. It landed at Halifax in the same year that it was organized, and its record in the fighting at Lousiburg, Montmorenci, Ste. Foye and on the Plains of Abraham is an integral part of Canadian annals. Even the French-Canadian historians pay tribute to the dash and gallantry of the Fraser Highlanders. After the cession of Canada to Great Britain, most of the survivors of the regiment took their discharges, received grants of land, and settled in Nova Scotia or Quebec. In Nova Scotia there is hardly a township but has its Frasers, while in Quebec these Highland soldiers became so merged with the French-Canadian population that their name in time lost the original form. There have been many accessions by immigration to the representatives of the clan in Canada, but in the nineties it was estimated that fully four-fifths of the Frasers in Canada could trace their descent to the victorious clansmen of Cape Breton and the capture of Quebec.

Quick Wit and Ready Tongue.

Had it not been for the quick-wittedness and knowledge of the French language of a Fraser, Wolfe's attack, which changed the destiny of half a continent, might have failed utterly. As the boats carrying the British soldiers floated up with the tide in the darkness, Brigadier-General Simon Fraser the younger, of Balnnain, occupied a place in one of the first, answered the successive challenges of the French sentries, and lulled suspicion by giving the name of a French regiment which he knew was expected with a convoy of supplies for the beleaguered garrison. To one especially zealous sentry who approached the river bank and asked: "Why don't you speak with an audible voice?" he replied with grim humor: "Hush, we shall be overheard and discovered." This brave and resourceful officer met his end at the Battle of Saratoga, where, after General Burgoyne lost his head, he assumed the direction of operations and made himself so conspicuous that he became the target of a couple of American sharp-shooters, acting under instructions of their commander, who recognized that if Fraser was not put out of action the British were in a fair way to snatch victory from defeat.

Clan Fraser in Canada.

In 1868 members of the Fraser family in Quebec took the first steps towards organizing the Clan Fraser in Canada, and this was accomplished at a meeting held in Ottawa. Hon. James Fraser de Ferraline, of Nova Scotia, was elected Chief, for British North America, and Hon. John Fraser de Berry who set the plan afoot, was chosen chief for Quebec and secretary of the clan. Each of the other ten provinces also had its chief. After a short existence, the organization lapsed, principally because of its elaborate constitution and its intangibility of purpose, but it was instrumental in gathering much valuable and interesting information about the Clan in Canada. In 1894 the Clan Fraser was again organized, and this body is still flourishing. This organization was completed at a meeting and dinner held in Toronto, under the chairmanship of Mr. Alexander Fraser, now the provincial archivist of Ontario, and author of "The Clan Fraser in Canada," from which book most of the data on which this sketch is prepared has been obtained. A copy presented by the author is to be found in the Fraser Institute, itself a memorial to the generosity and public spirit of a member of the clan who was a prominent citizen of the Montreal of his day.

Celtic or Norman Origin.

Ther are two theories as to the origin of the name and the clan, one being that the founders came over with William the Conqueror, and the other that they were of Celtic beginnings. Early forms of the name were Fraser, Fresar, Frisel, Frisele, Freshele, de Fraser and de Frisle. Proponents of the Celtic theory say that Frasers held estates in the South of Scotland before the Battle of Hastings, fought in 1066, and that before 1109 they had possessions in the Lothians, in Tweedale and further north, at a time when the rulers of Scotland were still hostile to the Norman conquerors of England. They derive the name from the "Gaelic "frith," a forest, and "siol," seed or offspring. Simon Lord Lovat, of unhappy memory, was a believer in the Norman theory, and signed a bond of recognition with the Marquis Frezel de la Frezeliere, acknowledging the common origin of the two families.

Not only in warfare but in all pursuits demanding courage, integrity, skill and intellect of a high order, have Frasers distinguished themselves at home, abroad and throughout the Empire. The memory of Simon Fraser, explorer and discoverer of the river that bears his name, must always be honored in Canada. One of the foremost of Canadian authors is W. A. Fraser, of Toronto, whose stories of India bear comparison with those of Kipling. Canadian politicians of all stripes cherish affectionate memories of D. C. Fraser, "the giant of Guysboro." These instances might be multiplied indefinitely. Only a year or so ago artistic theatrical circles in London were mourning the untimely death of Lovat Fraser, rising artist and designer of the settings and costumes of the phenomenally successful revival of "The Beggar's Opera."
