

The Guardian Pictorial Page

The Prince of Wales receiving a bouquet from little Edna Drake while visiting the works of an electric company in Birmingham.

On the southern edge of the far north. The little white Anglian church at Moose Factory on James Bay, the only church in the settlement.

A webbed glove invented by Miss Anna Smith of New York is supposed to be a great help to those learning to swim.

Home of the Marion Star, the paper over which President Harding has now relinquished control.

Grover Loening, plane inventor and builder, nudged into the East River while he and three others were experimenting with a new air yacht. The machine was completely wrecked.

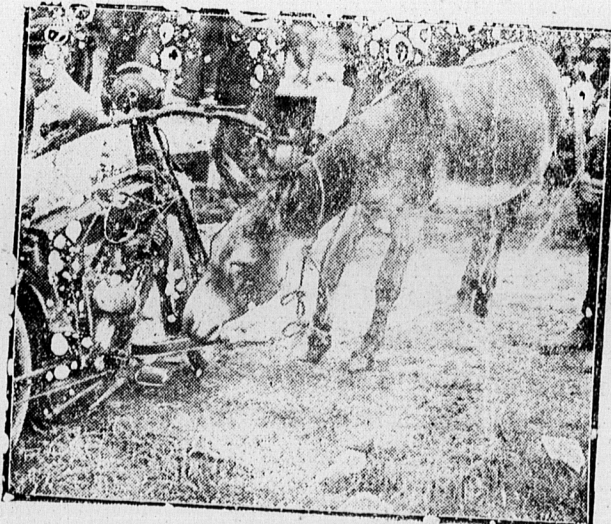

The Baroness Imhoff and her friend, Fraulein Von Groiss of Vienna, picking potatoes in the fields like any peasant woman of Central Europe.

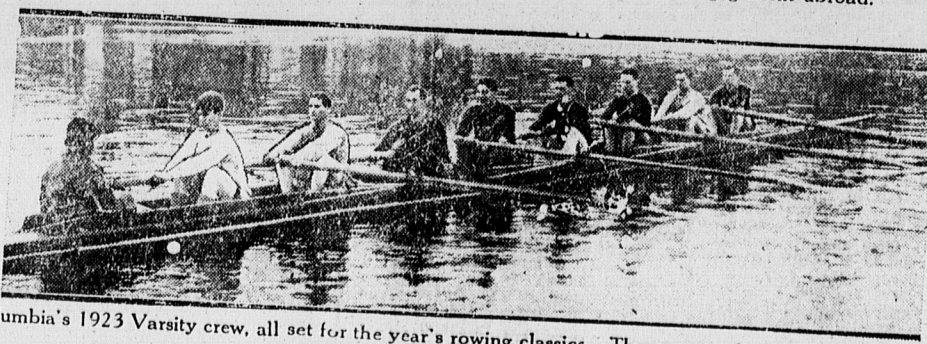

Miss Ange Brashing, well-known dancer, sails to fill an engagement abroad.

The two champion toy spaniels of the Berks, Bucks and Oxfordshire Canine Association photographed with their mistress, Lady Fowler.

An old moke on the Epsom Downs contemptuously sniffing at one of his great rivals, a motorcycle.

Columbia's 1923 Varsity crew, all set for the year's rowing classics. They are coached by a Canadian.

Miss McKane, the English girl who defeated Mrs. Mallory, the American champion, in the tennis tournament at Chiswick, photographed with her rival.

Landing a big one in a Nova Scotia lake.

Miss Dorothy Brooker sued a Boston newspaperman for $50,000 because of alleged suffering she endured when their engagement was broken.

In a little village near Toronto, extensive drilling operations are being carried on for oil. The spot is a mecca for visitors from the surrounding districts but so far there have been no results.