Historic Mansion Under Wreckers

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, Que., Feb. 25 (By the Canadian Press)—One of the graceful antique mansions of the province, known as the Manoir Lusier, constructed between the years of 1827 to 1837 and situated on the southeast section of this town, is rapidly disappearing under the hands of the wreckers. The vanishing of this handsome greystone structure was rendered necessary through the enlargement of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. Many a motorist will miss the sight of this well conserved relic of an ancient homestead, with its imposing old status, situated within a few feet from the highway.

E. Z. Massicotte, Montreal Court House Architect, recently explained that the building now being demolished was not a seigniorial house, but in modern parlance it would be called a mansion. It was explained in the first series of "Old Mansions, Old Houses," published in 1927 by the Historic Monuments Commission of the Province of Quebec, that the construction of this antique mansion was the realization of the dreams of Clement Charles Sabrevois de Bleury, who purchased the property from Rene Saint James, J. B. Baron and Joseph Rollin. These three were associates or

DEAN OF CANTERBURY GIVING UP PEANUTS

(Canadian Press)
LONDON, Feb. 25.—Rev. Dr. H. R. L. ("Dick") Sheppard, Dean of Canterbury, is resigning the Deanery owing to ill health. For 13 years "Dick" Sheppard was one of the best known clergymen in London his church, St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Trafalgar Square, being crowded Sundays as no other place of worship in the Metropolis was. He was the first in England to broadcast religious services. He was then vicar of St. Martin's. Because of ill health in 1927 he gave up his post in St. Martin's which he had held since 1914. He was made Dean of Canterbury in 1929.

Dr. Sheppard is suffering from heart trouble, and though his health of late has shown some improvement and the heart affection is yielding to treatment he has been warned by his doctors that he must not continue his present work. He hopes to be able to take up other work at a later date.

When in St. Martin's Church Dr. Sheppard was known to millions through his broadcasting activities, and he was "Dick" Sheppard to a host of admirers who never saw him. It is said that on one occasion after a broadcast service he found awaiting him the next morning a pile of letters higher than himself. Dr. Sheppard was bequeathed $100,000 in 1927 by Willina Prescott Bonbright an American millionaire banker who died that year and described the clergyman as his "dear friend".

ORIGINAL JOHN KNOX PULPIT

(Canadian Press)
LONDON, Feb. 25.—The newly restored Chapel of St. Andrews' University has just been re-opened. The interior of the Chapel has undergone a beautiful transformation. An interesting relic which has been included in the restoration scheme is Knox's pulpit, which stood for generations in the town church. Though it has been frequently altered and repaired, there is little doubt that it embodies part of the original pulpit from which John Knox preached while in St. Andrews. There are nine elaborately carved canopied stalls for the Principal and the Professors. The Architect who undertook the restoration was Reginald Fairlie.

TEACHER'S PROBLEM IS AN ACUTE ONE

MONTREAL, Feb. 25.—A problem which confronts the teacher in towns and rural communities is set forth by Miss Alice Dresser, of Richmond, Que., a teacher, who is provincial convener of the Legislation committee of the Quebec Women's Institutes. She writes: "As the season when School Boards engage their teachers draws near, an oft-debated question arises: 'Has a teacher the right to P.'—Impressive in full dress suit, apply for more than one position?' Members of school boards in most cases answer, 'No.' From many teachers the answer is, 'Yes.' 'Miss Brown reads a list of ad-

MENTS FOR TEACHERS

She answers three of these, applying for the position each offers. In due time she receives a favorable reply from one school board. Her application is accepted, and she signs her contract. The other two school boards also decide to engage her, but are notified that she already has a position. They miss the opportunity of securing another teacher and feel that they have been treated unfairly.

The clock has been going for about 200 years. It was silenced during the war.

Quaker City Will Celebrate

(By Paul Conly French, United Press Staff Correspondent)

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 25.—The celebration of Washington's birthday tomorrow recalls to Philadelphia the days when the city was the nation's capital and the first President lived in the old Morris Mansion at Sixth and High streets, now Sixth and Market.

The mansion, built by Robert Morris, financier of the Revolution, was a three story yellow brick structure, with gardens of flowering trees, shrubs and fruit and shade trees to conceal it from the passersby on old High street.

Morris's home was selected as the most charming residence in the city and the proper residence for the President when the Congress voted in 1790 to make the Quaker City the capital for a period of ten years until the new Federal city could be planned and built on the Potomac.

Arrived in November

Washington came to the city from his home at Mount Vernon in November of 1791, in time for the opening of Congress.

The rooms of the old mansion, which have long since been sacrificed to the gods of commerce and industry, witnessed events of the greatest importance in the formation of the Republic.

It was here that Citizen Genet, minister of the newly formed French republic, was greeted by President Washington, after he had disregarded the laws of the country and commissioned two privateers at Charleston, South Carolina, to prey on English shipping.

Washington held his levees and receptions with all the formality of a crowned head, in the drawing room on the left side of the mansion. Ever a stickler for details and religiously demanding all the respect due any office which he occupied, he always appeared at the affairs in formal attire, with a short sword at his side and holding his three cornered hat under his arm.

It was also at the old Morris home that the first receptions to the Diplomatic Corps, the Supreme Court Justices and members of Congress were given, which have since become traditional with the Executive Department of the Federal government.

Attended Church

Washington was a regular attendant at Christ Church. As was his habit, he would arrive just as the service was about to commence, escorted by a Negro slave in the grey and red of the Washington livery, who would open the door of his pew, and then retire, to squat on a cushion in the rear of the church until the service was concluded. At the close of the service, the congregation would remain seated until Washington had left by the south door.

It seems that in his elaborate functions of state, President Washington held no enmity toward the elite of Philadelphia society who had fed and feted the British soldiery of Lord Howe during the terrible winter of 1777-1778, while he and his starving and ill clad troops clung in acute misery to the hills and dales of Valley Forge.

Old letters and musty records show that he was frequently entertained by the leading citizens of the town. Clivedon, the country home of the former Chief Justice, Benjamin Chew, was the scene of numerous parties which he attended. It was around this historic old house, still standing in Germantown, that the hotly contested action of the Americans and British in the Battle of Germantown was fought.

Hamilton's home at Woodlands, the Peter's at Belmont, and others of the famous old revolutionary mansions throughout Fairmount Park, were the gathering places of the society and governmental folk of the day, and the President was oftentimes seen at their gatherings.

Seed Potatoes From P. E. I. & N. S. Hurdle U. S. Barriers

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Potatoes from Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia have developed a quality discovered in the Mexican jumping bean, enabling them to overleap the duty of 75 cents a hundredweight imposed upon Canadian potatoes in the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill.

The United States annually imports several million pounds of seed potatoes from the Dominion, but during January this year imports of seed potatoes reached a total of 25,900,000 pounds as compared with 10,792,000 pounds in the same month of the previous year. In addition to imports of seed potatoes in January, some 9,000,000 pounds of potatoes for foods were imported.

Canadian Art Well Represented At Fair

OTTAWA, Feb. 25 (By the Canadian Press)—The National Art Gallery's exhibit of Canadian art at the British Empire Trade Fair which opens at Buenos Aires, Argentina on March 14 next is said to be as representative a collection of all schools of Canadian art as has ever been exhibited outside of Canada. Sixty-seven Canadian artists are each represented in this exhibit by one of their best paintings.

The Canadian Art exhibit at Buenos Aires, while not as large as the one at Wembley in 1924 and 1925 where they created considerable interest is considered to be even more representative. Sixteen of the 67 pictures which have been sent to Buenos Aires are by artists of the older or realistic school and 14 are by artists generally classified as belonging to the Younger Group of Canadian Artists. The Group of Seven is well represented by works of the original members of the group and by 12 of its disciples. There are also 18 pictures by artists who are not associated with any of the above mentioned groups. All but four of the works of art sent to Buenos Aires are oil paintings. Of the other four, two are "temporos" and two are water color. Seventeen of the works of art chosen for the collection are by feminine artists.

Toronto, with its large art colony has the largest number of pictures in this collection. The Toronto group is represented by 30 artists, Montreal is represented by the work of 20 artists, Ottawa by eight and Winnipeg by two. The following cities, towns and villages are each represented by the work of one of its artists: Victoria, Vancouver, (formerly Toronto) Regina, Halifax, Ont.; Doon, Ont., Bay St. Paul, Que (at present residing in Paris, France).
