THE MORNING GUARDIAN

FRIDAY JANUARY, 26, 1900.

VICTORY AT SPION KOP.

Contrary to all precedent, especially in the present conflict, the War Office announced on Tuesday that on the following night Gen. Warren would make an attack upon the Boer pasition on Spion Kop, a lofty height, the key of the enemy's position, which it was impracticable to attempt in the day time. The announcement aroused the most painful interest. Disaster had before attended Gen. White's forces in a night attack at Nicholson's Nek, and a like disaster had attended Gatacre in his night march to Stormberg Junction. In both these night expeditions our forces had lost heavily in killed, wounded, prisoners and guns. It therefore seemed almost foolhardy to announce beforehand that the lofty hill with steep sides and almost inaccessible summit would be attacked on Tuesday night.

The German press rushed to the conclusion that the British position was desperate, that the attack must fail and that even the retreat of Warren's forces would be cut off. One prominent journal, the Berliner Tagblatt gave out in advance that Gen. Warren had been signally defeated. Not until Thursday did the British War Office relieve the suspense. Then the story was told that Warren's night attack had been completely successful, and that through the Boers had returned on Wednesday in great force and made a most determined attempt to retake the position, they had been gallantly repulsed.

How much turned upon the success of the desperate venture which Gen. Warren made is told in a sentence or two of Mr. I. N. Ford's despatch to the New York Tribune. We quote:

"If Spion Kop could be taken the enemy's main position and the road to Ladysmith would be commanded. British success would cut the Dutch army into two sections, and each could be attacked in turn. Defeat might be the signal for retirement to the Tugela and the abandonment of operations for the relief of Ladysmith."

Fortunately the attack succeeded and Spion Kop is held by our forces, despite the determined assaults of the enemy. There is doubtless great elation in the British camp, and proportionate depression in the Boer camp. It is a signal success upon which Gen. Warren and his brave soldiers are to be congratulated. So far, despite pretty heavy losses on Wednesday, all appears to have gone well with General Warren in the present campaign.

THE GUARDIAN is indebted to Superintendant James of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, for news of the election in Sherbrooke yesterday. The Conservative majority appears to have been increased by one vote since 1896.

The Toronto Globe comments on the fact that freight wagons on the ordinary roads between Toronto and Hamilton compete successfully with the railways in carrying goods graded as first and second class. The experiment having been made and the cost of wagon carriage being found to be less than the rates by rail, the number of freight waggons is being increased. It is quite clear that the railways are trying to squeeze their patrons a little too hard, forgetting proverb that "the worm will turn."

Now that Gen. Warren is distinguishing himself at the front the newspapers begin to tell us what manner of man he is. He is described as a thorough soldier but by no means a society man. He is simple and abstemious in his manner of living, a tireless worker, patient, cautious, but most persistent in carrying out what he undertakes. He resembles Gordon in his earnest piety, and knows South Africa thoroughly. These qualities and qualifications have already made him conspicuous in the campaign, though he is one of the more recent arrivals at the front.

rarely well performed and leaves us with the assurance that there is no dearth of musical talent of a high order in this city. Prof. Watts in his clarionet solo showed the musical possibilities of that instrument in the hands of a skilful player, while Prof. Vinnicombe's violin solo was greeted with vociferous applause. The elocutionary performers were Miss Flo McKenzie and T. A. McLean, Esq., both old favorites and both of whom fully sustained their reputation. Miss McKenzie's rendition of "Our Bit of the Thin Red Line" was particularly effective. Mr. McLean stirred the patriotic feelings of every true British breast as he read "The Burial of General Wauchoupe" a most striking tableau was that of the Scotch Thistle in front of which was grooped a number of Scotch lads and lasses in costume, while this picture was being displayed as if by magic the centre of the thistle parted and disclosed a portrait of the poet Burns. The designing of the thistle was done by Mr. Paton the mechanical part of the work was performed by Mr. P. Hughes and Miss McEachern did the decorating.

Following this tableau came a most difficult flag drill by 16 young ladies of the Prince Street School, the evolutions of which were performed with grace and precision. After which came the gem of the evening for artistic effect, the light, graceful dance to the music of the Bagpipes of a number of lads and lasses costumed in the plaid and tartan The dancing was under the direction of Miss. H. C. McDonald and reflected great credit on her training. The accompanists of the evening were Profs. Earle, Watts and Mr. Blanchard. It was a truly enjoyable concert and merrited the audience it received. The verdict of those attending was when next there is a Burns' concert I'll be there.
