THE GUARDIAN SHORT STORY

(Continued on page 7) possession of the emerald—possibly it was one his—and I know that some day he will wear it out and— He threw out his hands with a hopeless gesture and sat down in the chair and stared into the fire. "I shouldn't think he'd want it now," remarked Coleman grimly, with a side glance at the dull green stone in the case. "I can't imagine any one, especially clever chaps like those Indians, bothering over worthless glass." Lamson sighed impatiently. "I thought you would understand," he whispered. "It's vanished. I hoped to throw them off the track—to make them believe that I had disposed of it. I had an imitation made in Paris and gave them every chance to steal that, but they would have none of it. They knew I have the stone, and they are determined to have it. They are getting impatient now." "But do you mean they are here—in New York?" gasped Coleman. "I found this on the table when I came in after dinner. The chances are that you might have found me done for when you dropped in a half hour later." As he spoke he lifted a small round basket woven of wicker and with a lid curiously fastened. He lifted the lid and beckoned the other man to look. "Heavens!" Coleman stared at the gray, lifeless coils of a tiny snake. "There was an odor of chloroform about the basket." Lamson laughed shortly. "I suspected the contents of the basket. I have seen such things in India. I took precaution to stupefy the inmate—it is a deadly horned viper—before I investigated." "How did it get in here?" muttered Coleman. Lamson shrugged his shoulders and looked again toward the window draperies, which stirred slightly as by a sudden draft. "Give it up," he said wearily. He was silent and thoughtful for a moment and then added slowly: "I believe I'll let them have it after all. I am tired of the chase. It's wearing on me. Come, let us go into the library." He placed the basket on the table and led the way to a door in a corner of the room. Coleman followed him with an anxious gleam in his eyes and as they entered the library and the door closed behind them he grasped Lamson by the arm and began, with affectionate concern in his voice: "Say, old fellow, don't you think that you've sort of got the emerald on your mind? Let it prey upon you, you know, and that you imagine you are being pursued?" "Look!" Lamson interrupted him shortly. He had drawn aside a heavy curtain and disclosed a carved panel through the interstices of which the interior of the studio was plainly visible. There was the table beside the fire. On it were the gem cabinet unlocked, the emerald in its case and the wicker snake basket. Suddenly the window draperies fluttered, and a long, lithe, black garbed figure glided forward. A white flash flashed in the lamplight, and beneath it was a dark skinned face and fiercely brilliant green eyes. The man hovered over the table for a brief instant and then turned and glided back to the window. Again the draperies stirred and were still. Coleman rubbed his startled eyes. The wicker basket was gone. The Hissar emerald was gone. He followed Lamson back to the studio and watched his friend as he closed and locked the open window. The artist then stepped to the hearth rug and lighted a cigarette. "And the Hissar emerald?" began Coleman moodily, when Lamson stopped him with a gesture. "Is here," he said coolly, snapping open his silver matchbox and displaying within its lid the rich green sparkle and royal splendor of the Hissar emerald.

A Good Trick.

The parrot's determination to speak his set phrases under all sorts of circumstances often produces strange situations. The story is told of a slight of hand performer who kept a parrot that he had trained to say whenever one of his master's tricks had been finished: "That's a good trick. What's the next one?" One day the juggler, being in a seaport town, gave his performance in a loft on one of the wharfs, which happened to get just over the place where a large quantity of powder was stored in kegs. The juggler was about to perform some feat which required the lighting of a candle. He lighted it and threw the match away without making sure that the blaze had gone out. The match, still burning, fell through a crack in the floor and dropped into one of the kegs of powder, which exploded with great force, throwing the building into the air. The parrot, who was blown up with the rest, did not stop until it reached the pinnacle of the topmast of a great ship which lay off the wharf. There he clung desperately, and, looking down at the world below, he called out in a shrill voice: "That's a good trick! What's the next one?"

He Was a Philosopher.

A busy merchant who had not taken a holiday for years, in which time every other member of his family had enjoyed many outings, concluded to give himself a rest of a week or two and started for Scotland. When he had been gone a day he received a telegram from his wife to this effect: "Our house was entirely destroyed by fire last night. The children and I escaped unharmed. Come home at once." MARRIA. To this, after reflecting a moment, he replied as follows: "What is the use of coming home when there is no home to come to? Take the children to mother's. Stay there with them till I join you and don't worry." FRANK. —London Scraps.

Your Head Aches Tongue is Coated Mouth Tastes Bad Stomach is Sick. The Gastric Juices are not Doing Their Duty and You're in the Grip of Nervous Dyspepsia. A hot bitter fluid, and sour indigestible food rise in your mouth. Your vision is crossed with specks that float before the eyes. Very shortly you'll have nausea, rank breath, and sleepless nights. What you need is Ferrozene. It regulates the gastric juices, puts new life into the stomach, braces digestive powers, gives the aid that's so badly required. Ferrozene is the best treatment because it goes to the root of the trouble remedies the conditions that cause dyspepsia—and thereby cures permanently. If you want proof, read the experience of Mr. E. P. Davison, a well known resident of Portland, who writes: "Ferozone is beyond doubt a most powerful cure for indigestion and weak stomach. Food so badly disagreed with me that I was almost afraid to eat. Pastry and starchy foods fermented, caused sour risings and gave me backaches, brown taste and offensive breath. I grew weak, my weight ran down fifteen pounds and my looks fully indicated all that was wrong. Ferrozene put me on my feet again. It braced me, unrefreshed my digestion and made me a well man." Doctor and patients alike speak of the merit of Ferrozene; it is different from other remedies, different because it cures so you stay cured. Try it; sold everywhere in 50 boxes.
