(Continued from Page 1) concentrations of British forces have been revealed," the paper said, "between the zone of the White Nile and the Blue Nile, Sudan and parts of Lake Rudolf. The British authorities had gone even so far as to seek native troops among our Egyptian population. In the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan a quadrilateral of railroad organizations with an evident military character had been constituted with two sides facing our colonies and Ethiopia."

"ITALIAN PROPAGANDA" LONDON, May 22.—A British war office spokesman today branded reports from Rome that Great Britain had concentrated troops along the Sudan-Ethiopian frontier as "Italian propaganda" containing "no truth whatever." COMPLETE PARITY

Air Pact Welcomed

Next was Hitler's indication the air pact might be bound up with an effort to safeguard the civilian population against indiscriminate attack from the air. "It has made me almost physically sick," said Mr. Baldwin, "to think that I and my friends and statesmen in almost every other country 2,000 years after our Lord was crucified, have to consider ways and means how women and children may have to be taken to hospital suffering from poison gas."

But Britain's requirements in the air had been given the most careful study, he added, and parity in the air was necessary to secure the two objects most desired by Britain—some form of collective security like Lomarno and some method of limitation. He endorsed Hitler's stand that limitation could best be achieved starting from parity, than if different nations set arithmetic figures of their needs without relation to others.

Confident of Support

The cost of the R.A.F. expansion "will inevitably be substantial," Lord Londonderry told the Upper House. "A supplementary estimate will be submitted later. His Majesty's government will not in any circumstances accept a position of inferiority in the air to Germany. If the program proves insufficient we will increase it—cost what it may in money or effort—and we believe that public opinion in this country will give us unhesitating support in so doing."

In both Houses of Parliament the Labor party immediately attacked the government's new plans. In the Commons, Clement Attlee demanded that a halt be called in the armaments race and a disarmament conference be summoned forthwith to consider the situation in the light of Hitler's speech.

The Lords, Lord Ponsonby for the Labor peers charged the government had abandoned the collective system and was returning to the old system of competition. For the Liberal peers the Marquess of Lothian supported the government's policy of parity in the air.

IN MEMORIAM

THE LATE MRS. BEARISTO

A large circle of relatives and friends are mourning today the passing of a lady of refinement, culture and distinguished family—a link with Confederation. We refer to the late Mrs. Margaret Louise Bearisto, widow of the late Dr. Peter MacNutt Bearisto, whose funeral takes place from St. Paul's Church this afternoon. Mrs. Bearisto was a daughter of the late Hon. W. H. Pope and inherited the ability and literary tastes of her distinguished father. She contributed from time to time interesting articles and poems to The Guardian, usually on a non-deplum. She was devoutly religious and took a keen interest in all good work, especially for the benefit of the young and rising generation.

Her only surviving son, Mr. A. H. O. Bearisto, of Toronto, arrived last evening to attend the funeral. A younger son, Wendell Phillips Brooks Bearisto, made the supreme sacrifice during the Great War while serving as a gunner with the Canadian Artillery.

Two sisters, Mrs. W. F. Mitchell and Mrs. Georgina Pope, R. C. Charlottetown, survive, as also a stepdaughter, Mrs. H. W. B. Stavert, Victoria, B. C., and a stepson, Mr. Fred Bearisto, Sedgwick, Alta.

Mrs. Bearisto's death was somewhat unexpected, as she had been going about as usual until a week ago, when a cold developed, followed by pneumonia, which caused her to enter into rest on Thursday, before her son could reach her bedside.

The Guardian joins with a wide circle of friends in extending sympathy to the bereaved relatives.

"Strange Street" Prominently Reviewed

(C. P. Cable By Guardian's Special Wire) LONDON, May 23.—(Thursday)—"Strange Street," the autobiography of A. Beverley Baxter, 44-year-old Torontoian who became editor-in-chief of Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express, was prominently reviewed in today's newspapers.

It relates the amazing story of the rise of the former assistant in a music shop in Toronto to a high post in Fleet Street, a junior partner of the famous "Max and Bax" combine and finally to a position as a $60,000 a year publicity executive for a British film corporation.

"Strange Street" reveals Lord Beaverbrook's undying affection for Andrew Bonar Law, "the other New Brunswick boy whom he made prime minister of Great Britain." It describes how the newspaper man was present at the death of Bonar Law.

Shortly after, "an old man with sunken, colorless cheeks and stooped shoulders walked away from the house."

The book contains many sidelights on the character of Lord Beaverbrook, who was Sir Max Aitken before his elevation to the peerage. After a week-end stay at Leatherhead, where Lord Beaverbrook entertained all manner of eminent people, Baxter wrote thus of his host:

"I found a mind richly stored in literature and history and a gift of picturesque and incisive language that made it impossible ever to let the mind wander. "He had humor, too, and the rare power of being personal, of showing that he was acutely conscious of the other's presence. He had a memory like a mouse-trap. It seized on its morsel of fact with a snap and literally never let go. "I have seen him suddenly accosted by some Canadian acquaintance of 30 years back. Beaverbrook would take one look at him, the vein of his forehead would swell, and then he would say: "How did your Uncle John get on when he sold his farm? And where's that no-good cousin of yours?"

"Sometimes I think my memory was responsible for his violent fits of depression. The ability to forget is part of the art of living. Beaverbrook could never look back upon the pleasantly-blurred meadows of the past. Every blade of grass, every thistle, every rabbit hole was as vivid as on the day when his feet trod among them."

"Women were few in public life WINNIPEG, May 22.—(CP)—Fifty years ago, a woman on a platform, ready to speak before a meeting, was an event so unusual that Mrs. E. Coristine, of St. Vital, recalls it clearly. She told of her surprise at "first seeing a woman as a public speaker" at a meeting in Young church, when many old time members of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational churches combined to tell "the young lawmakers of today" what it was like "in pioneer times."
