And yet he was firm in his conviction that the future of Louisiana lay in agriculture, not in mines; and he insisted that the colonists should be selected with this thought in view.

I refused a bed in his quarters, for I was his prisoner. Nor did I care to be too much under his thumb should I discover an opportunity of escaping. So, after his courteous good night, I went to the barracks, where Sergeant Suarez suddenly showed me a bunk. Very soon I decided my outdoor life had unfitted me for sleeping under cover. I took my robes and went outside and arranged my bed under the oaks. As I lay down three figures passed me and took up positions between me and the shore, the woods to the west. Doubtless there were sharp eyes between me and the woods at the east.

This espionage was extremely irritating. It accented the danger of my being in Biloxi when Damon the Fox arrived. My report on Canada, so tactically confided to the Fox, was my death warrant. That one slip left me powerless to face the fellow down did he return. How completely he had deceived me was shown by my trusting the data to his care.

The danger from the Fox had seemed rather remote until the sentinels surrounded me that night; then it closed about me and smothered me, and I remained awake for hours trying to arrive at some sensible plan for leaving Biloxi and reaching New Orleans and keeping my appointment with the girl. When the sun rose I had advanced a single step. I would give the impression I was interested in Pensacola. That would be my logical haven if I tried to escape.

That morning I stimulated cunning in my way of questioning different men about Pensacola, the time it took to make the port, and the like. Having sown this seed I visited the magazine office when it was empty, and studied the wall-maps as if wishing to refresh my recollection. Finishing there, I returned to the shore and talked with a fellow who owned a small vessel called a flute. I asked him if he ever made Pensacola in his little craft. In the background I saw the sergeant glaring at us.

I must have a boat to take me to Pontchartrain. It was necessary that I escape under cover of night, leaving Bienville to believe I was making for Pensacola I had informed mademoiselle that I would call for her, or send for her; and I intended to keep my word. Aside from this there were the

WELLAND CANAL TO OPEN SOON

(Canadian Press) TORONTO, Ont., Aug. 30.—Canada's greatest man-made waterway, the Welland Ship Canal, which will be officially opened soon, represents some of the greatest engineering achievements of the age.

The canal, out through the Niagara Peninsula from Lake Ontario to Lake Erie, elevates vessels passing through it a total distance of 326 1/2 feet, representing the difference in level of the two lakes. Seven locks, each having a lift of 46 1/2 feet, will overcome this distance in level. In addition, there is an eighth lock, which is a safety feature, to be used if one of the other seven is inoperative.

The direct line of the Canal down the face of the escarpment and the topography of the lower plateau permitted the adoption of the 46 1/2 foot lifts, which constitute a peculiar feature of the design of the canal and has no precedent in actual construction for locks of their size.

Owing to the World War, work on the Canal, which was begun in 1913, practically ceased in 1916 and 1918. After the Armistice, however, the government decided to resume work on a small scale and arranged with the original contractors for the resumption of work on their former contracts for four sections. From January 1919, the work was carried on under a cost plus percentage basis in a more or less intermittent manner, due to labor troubles and other causes, until 1921 and 1922, when the cost plus percentage contracts were cancelled and the work relet under unit price contracts.

celled and the work relet under unit price contracts.

Some idea of the immensity of the undertaking may be gained from figures contained in the Chief Engineers report, issued recently. The report shows that rock estimated at 8,961,000 cubic yards was excavated. Earth excavation reached the tremendous total of 50,731,000 cubic yards. Water-tight embankments required 4,771,000 cubic yards of excavation. All classes of concrete used on the canal reached 3,516,000 cubic yards. Reinforcing steel used amounted to 28,701,000 pounds, while sheet steel piling required 37,590,000 pounds.

Locks, 4, 5 and 6 are twin locks in one flight, with a total aggregate lift of 139 1/2 feet. They are similar to the Gatun Locks of the Panama Canal, which, though of somewhat larger dimensions, have only an aggregate lift of 85 feet.

Chippawa Creek crosses under the present canal in a concrete inverted siphon culvert, consisting of six barrel tubes with vertical end shafts, an other unusual feature of this Canal. There was considerable difficulty in carrying out the work of building this new culvert, but by using 15,819,000 pounds of sheet piling, and 3,388,000 board feet of timber bracing, the sides of the excavation were supported.

The foundations of this culvert, by the way, are 75 feet below normal water level of the Canal. In order to allow navigation on the Third Canal to continue, a special cofferdam was built with steel sheet piling driven in a series of cells interlocked with one another and filled with clay, in which the new culvert was built.

Lock No. 8, 1,380 feet long between the inner gates, is the longest lock in the world, being only approached by two locks on the American side at Sault Ste. Marie, both being 1,350 feet long. It is situated about a mile above lock 7, and is necessary as a safety measure to hold back the water on the summit level should any accident occur to the gates on Lock 7 or the flight locks.

The disposal of excavated material presented a knotty problem to the engineers who constructed the new canal, but many thousands of cubic feet of rock and earth were dumped into Lake Ontario, while many more thousands were used to construct the artificial harbor at Port Weller, Eastern terminus of the "Big Ditch." Two embankments, extending into Lake Ontario for nearly 1 1/2 miles, were made. The entrance to the harbor is 400 feet wide and widens out to a bottom width of 800 feet at the harbor. The harbor itself is just over a mile long and covers an area of about 150 acres.

A large part of the surface of the embankments had been graded, sodded and macadamized and a considerable area of the inner end of the em-
