An Adventure In Years BY CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XXX.

As Sonia thought of her life with Strong she wondered if in some former existence she could have injured him, and if it were by way of retribution that he had the power to torture her now.

Arduently she had desired to marry Strong, yet that seemed so many, many years ago! But there were other things also she had desired. She had wanted to be loved, to be made to give her love willingly and anxiously. Heredity, the circumstances of her life, then her environment—being in the studio alone with him for hours at a time—had given an impetus to her desire she could not resist. This, after she had been convinced she never would become an artist.

For a time she had accepted a sort of contentment as happiness. But soon nature cried out against the calm, imperturbable, sarcastic man she had married. The man who, as soon as he had placed her in his home, seemed to think all duty toward her fulfilled. The man who, if he saw, paid no attention to the longing in her eyes, the yearning after something lacking in her life with him.

But it was not until the advent of Ned Campbell that she knew what it was she missed. And then at first only hazily. But gradually he satisfied the longing for companionship she had been denied by Strong while her woman nature still slept. Now she was faced to face with the fact that she loved Ned Campbell with all the strength of her nature. All that the years had kept pent up within her she gave him.

Sonia thought she could love like this and hide it from every one. She forgot that no woman can hide from Strong loving or hating eyes. She surrendered of herself, even though that surrender is only soul surrender.

"As a man thinketh in her heart so is he," might be paraphrased. "As a woman loveth in her heart, so does she show it." And so had Sonia shown her very soul to Beverly Strong from the very beginning, and so now Ned had also felt something new, something different, something strange in their intimacy.

Had she for a moment realized that her husband knew, that his constant throwing of Ned and herself together was in his way to test her, she might have been wiser and so might not have allowed this love to so possess her. But that Strong would deliberately try to tempt her, that his hawk eyes had seen and despised her because of her love for the boy so much younger and so had planned either her martyrdom or her destruction, she never dreamed.

But love and hate are closely joined. And when Beverly Strong saw that Ned Campbell could rouse what he eluded him in Sonia he planned to make her suffer also.

Sonia had passed a sleepless night. She felt unequal to an appointment she had made and told her husband so at the breakfast table. He answered in his usual indifferent way, then left for the studio. Sonia hurried to the telephone and called Ned's bachelor apartment. The Jap informed her his master had left for the studio. Almost breathlessly she would just have time before Beverly reached there.

"Yes," Ned's voice thrilled her. "It is I, Sonia. Come over for a few moments Ned—hurry!"

"Never mind! Just hurry! And if you meet Beverly—say nothing. But you won't meet him if you hurry!"

As Sonia had contemplated the idea of Ned marrying, she had thought of herself as the most miserable of beings. Add uncertainty to distress and the sum of it was a sorrow multiplied by the infinite. It was this uncertainty that caused Sonia to run impulsively to the telephone and urge Ned to come to her. She felt that it was only fair to herself to let Ned know she loved him—if he had not already guessed it.

She shuddered as she thought of her husband. She shut her eyes, and she could see him, see his ambiguous smile, his satiric eyes, his twisted mouth. She could hear that chuckle that always so annoyed her.

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN!

A sound reached her. She opened her eyes. Ned Campbell was there. Neither heard the opening and closing of the street door.

For a moment Sonia's eyes held those of the boy. Then she took his hand and led him into the library. On the shining floor her foot slipped. She staggered and would have fallen but for his arms.

As he held her she lost all thought of everything save that the man she loved had her in his arms, that it was his heart beating against hers. She put her arms about his neck and pressed a kiss upon his lips. Then, almost fainting, she drew away only to perceive that she had nothing to tell.

Ned knew that she, older than he Beverly Strong's wife, loved him. As he sank into a chair he dropped upon his knees beside her, his head in her lap.

Quietly the door opened. Beverly Strong entered the room.

IN MEMORIAM

BENJAMIN HUNTLEY

The community of Lot 11 was saddened by hearing of the death of Benjamin Huntley on Tuesday 26th of April aged 19 years. All that loving hands could do, and the skill of the medical attendants proved unavailable, and after lingering illness of two months he quietly and peacefully passed away to receive the reward of a truly loving and christian young man. Deceased was a favorite of all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, always pleasant and jovial and smiling, never complaining, but cheerfully did he, under all circumstances render labor to his employers. Never in this community was sympathy seen or expressed more in general, as the conveyed to mother earth all that was mortal of one who was so dearly loved. Young and innocent, Benny died as he had lived. To those who watched his bedside in the early hours of morn. he asked to have his mothers and sisters arise, to say a last farewell. What a comfort (even though with tears) to see a life spent in his service, in the morning and noon day of youth, meeting the evening of youth unshamed and unafraid. His father predeceased him 14 months ago, and he leaves to mourn his irreparable loss his mother, Mrs. Albert Huntley, his sisters, Miss Hattie and Alma of Waltham, Mass (but who are now home and Mrs. William Morrison of Freeiland, and three brothers, Harry of Dartmouth, Mass, and John of Woborn, Mass. On Thursday a very large and representative concourse of people followed the remains to the Freeiland Church and Cemetery, where all that was mortal was laid beside that of his father. The services being conducted by Rev. W. F. Sawdon, of Biddeford, who visited him during his illness.

The pall bearers were, Kenneth and Channing Henderson, Ferdinand and Kilbridge, Cyril Bulger, James and Wilbur Hardy.

MRS. HUGH DUMPHY

Mrs. Hugh Dunphy died at her home in Kensington on April 27th after an illness of only two days. Her sudden demise was a pathetic shock to the family and friends who all held her in so high esteem. She was attended in her last illness by the Pastor, Monsignor D. J. Gillis who administered the dying graces that the last sacraments to mourn Catholic Church imparts. The absent members of the family had been summoned, but she died before the arrived. The funeral was held on Sunday May 1st and was attended by one hundred carriages, including the many friends that Mrs. Dunphy and family have in their own and neighboring communities. The service in the church and at the grave were performed by the pastor, Rev. Monsignor D. J. Gillis. The pall bearers were: G. R. McMahon, John Payton, Edward Pennergrast, William Cousins, Thomas Gorman and James Bryenton.

Mrs. Dunphy was a daughter of the late Donald Gillis, Kensington and was born, Nov. 29, 1851, and was married April 6th, 1869. She leaves to mourn a family of six children: Mrs. James Gallagher, Newton, Mass., Miss Amanda, Brookline, Mass. Mrs. James McCarroll, Mill Valley, Daniel C. St. John, N. B. Harry L. Jamaica Plains, Mass., and James on the homestead. Her husband predeceased her 18 years ago. The surviving members of the paternal family are: Mrs. Alexander McDonald, Kensington, and Mrs. Lawrence McDonald, Richmond.

Mrs. Dunphy was a woman in the fullest comprehension of the term. Her first care was the faithful discharge of her duties that devolve upon a wife and mother, and her family and home bear testimony of the effects of her dutiful care. She observed the rules of her faith with conscientious care and gave her family an example
