Time And Brains Pooled To Lower Building Costs

CLARKSON, Ont., Oct. 19—(CP)—Nine professional office employees turn manual workers two evenings a week, and every weekend, to build their own homes at an estimated saving of $50,000. The money saved represents about 50 per cent of the cost of each house.

The men, employees of a large oil company 15 miles from Toronto, have given up golf and other pastimes to build their homes on a co-operative money saving basis. Often their wives and children accompany them to help with lighter tasks.

The scheme was originated last March by C.E. Campbell, an electrical engineer with the oil firm. He was so disgusted with trying to find a home that he decided to take matters into his own hands.

Eight of his fellow workers did not hesitate to pool their spare time in the scheme. They are accountant Jack Runnals, who takes care of finances with advice from Ev Fleming, a tax expert; Garth MacDonald, a lawyer who helped get expensive technicalities completed at minimum cost; Bill Chambers and Harold Eastwood, architectural draftsmen, who provided expert advice on plans; Don Jamnaway and Lloyd Johnson, chemical engineers; and Don Smith, mechanical engineer.

Each man should be responsible for his own financing," explained Campbell. "In addition, each chooses his own house plans and his own building site."

However, purchase of materials is carried out on a co-operative basis, often resulting in a discount when large quantities are ordered. Runnals believes that the system works "amazingly well."

He said slow and difficult jobs, such as laying foundations, were completed in short order because "it doesn't get so tiresome when a gang work together."

Work such as plumbing, plastering, wiring or brick-laying for chimneys has been left for skilled tradesmen. Although each man hires the skilled help he needs, said Runnals, "we usually hire the same man to do our work."

All it takes, they say, is careful planning, hard work and enthusiasm. But, of course, the professional training of each man has done much to help the group on its way.

VANCOUVER'S HOME WON'T CROSS OCEAN

PETERSHAM, Surrey, England, Oct. 19—(CP)—A plan to move Glen Cottage, the old home of Capt. George Vancouver, from Petersham to Vancouver has been frustrated.

All it takes, they say, is careful planning, hard work and enthusiasm. But, of course, the professional training of each man has done much to help the group on its way.

PANOK, a prisoner of war for five years, had first refusal of the property when he moved in with his wife after the war. An electrical engineer, he has since modernized the cottage.

Vancouver authorities wanted the cottage as a memorial to the man who, in 1792, sailed round the island which now bears his name. One suggestion was that it should be re-erected where Lumberman's Arch used to stand in Stanley Park.

NO CIGARETS, NO PIPE

LONDON, Oct. 19—(CP)—Ibrahim Lahore of Karachi heard there was a cigaret shortage in England. Therefore, when he had to fly here on business, he just brought along his pipe.

But, when he got it out for a quiet smoke aboard the plane bound for London, crew members made him put it away again. "It's just not safe," they said. Saddy Ibrahim dismantled his hookah, with its three-pound tobacco bowl, 24-inch stem connected to a quart bottle of oil for lubrication, and three feet of rubber tubing.
