DUKE OF KENT

The Duke started the day with a visit to the Royal Air Force ferry command, charged with ferrying war planes to Britain. After that he reviewed a snappy air force honor guard before making a diligent inspection of No. 1 Wireless School of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan.

He lunched at the officer's mess and his motorcade was off again to take him to the Angus shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway where he saw heavy infantry tanks trundle along on assembly line. Then he visited the Fairchild Aircraft plant at Longueuil where he watched bombers in production and saw a representative display of the planes which are being manufactured from coast to coast in Canada's factories.

Tomorrow he will visit Sorel, Que. and fly on to Murray Bay and nearby St. Irenee where he will be a week-end guest at the summer home of State Secretary P. F. Casgrain.

Everywhere he was scheduled to make a stop a crowd was gathered to applaud the King's brother, and enroute through the city he found lines of waving spectators wherever he went.

After spending a day of seeing airmen who fly the planes and guide them by wireless, other airmen who ferry them across the Atlantic workmen and women who make the planes, he topped it off by a bird's eye view of the product of Canadian aviation industry.

Drawn up on the Fairchild hangar apron in a long formidable line was the handiwork of Canadian factories and workmen. There were the Stranraer reconnaisance bomber, the Hampden bomber, Bolingbroke bomber, Afran Anson reconnaisance bomber, Lysander reconnaisance plane, Hurricane fighter, Norsemen and Harvard trainers, Menasco Moth and Tiger Moth trainers and Mother trainers, and the Fleet Finch and Fleet Fort trainers. In front of each plane were the heads of the factories from which they had been produced and the Duke talked with each.

The Duke also had a word for the factory workers and among those he stopped to talk with was Mrs. Dorothy Griffiths of Wolverhampton, England. She was riveting a piece of bomber fuselage and looked up to see the Duke smiling at her. Then she told him her problem. Her husband was in the Royal Air Force and she had taken her two children and come to Canada. She had got a job in the aircraft factory and was supporting them in safety. Should she be criticized for following this plan, she asked the Duke.

"No, that's grand," he replied with a smile.

All through his tour today he switched easily from French to English and back to French again, depending on the tongue of the person he happened to be addressing.

"He sure knows the score," was the way Fairchild's test pilot put it after the Duke had quizzed him for five minutes on the plant's Bolingbroke production. Capt. J. H. (Red) Lymburner, Dunnville, Ont., and a pilot on a Lincoln Ellsworth Antarctic expedition, was speaking in appreciation of the Duke's wide knowledge of aircraft performance. The Duke talked to him, he said, about everything "the plane will do and he seemed to know all about its English counterpart the Blenheim bomber."

Before he retired to his hotel for what an exhausted aide declared "a well earned rest" he had an English tea in his honor at the Chalet on Mount Royal as the guest of the city of Montreal. Mayor Adhemar Raynault presided and introduced His Royal Highness to members of the city council and their wives.

Collette once attempted to sail from the Normandy coast to Britain as a Free French volunteer. This was after he served on the warship Niger which was sunk in the British evacuation of Dunkerque, had been taken to Britain and then in some unexplained manner returned immediately to France.

Other odd facts of his background included his service as a sailor on the now famous French ship Massila which transported former premier Edouard Daladier and other prominent French leaders to North Africa in an effort to escape the French debacle of June, 1940.

It also was disclosed that he formerly was a member of Col. Francois de la Rocque's Fascist party, the Croix de Feu, but his parents said he had shown no interest in politics lately.

S'side man Seriously injured In accident

Mr. Sampson Grady, a former councillor of the Summerside Town Council had the misfortune to fracture his hip when he was stock by a motor cycle when crossing Water St., near his home yesterday afternoon. The driver of the motor cycle was Leading Aircraftsman Monette from the Summerside Airport. He was coming into Summerside and had his wife as a passenger. In stopping the machine suddenly in an attempt to avoid Mr. Grady, Monette and his wife were thrown to the ground but were not seriously hurt.

Monette reported the accident to Chief of Police White and assisted in getting help for Mr. Grady, who was rushed to the Prince County Hospital.

Mr. Grady's condition is serious, as he has a compound fracture of the hip as well as a bad cut at the back of the head. He was not unconscious when picked up and was able to talk with those who came to his assistance. He is resting as well as can be expected.—S danelles Straits sector must carry identification papers.

Interpreting The War

The million bayonets which Ankara has said would bar any attempt to force Turkey into the war look less formidable now, in the light of the invasion of Russia and the portents that the Mediterranean and Asia Minor are fated this fall and winter to become a major war theatre.

Just what use the Nazis might make of Turkish territorial waters is less clear than that they will need every available facility to wrest control of the Black Sea from the Red naval forces.

The undertaking promises to be substantially more difficult than domination of the Baltic which was brought nearer by Thursday's capture of Talinn and the subsequent blow dealt Russian warships and transports.

In the 700-mile-long Black Sea, Russian naval superiority is relatively stronger. Furthermore, distance limits the degree of air power that can be brought to bear. Two major bases were lost to the Russians by the capture of Nicolaev and encirclement of Odessa, but there remains Sebastopol and distant Novorossisk, where there are oil and other facilities at isolated Batum, which Russian and British fighting planes can help protect.

constricted below with their edges entre (except No. 6) and with cordate or auricular clasping bases, then the plant is either (4) A. laevis; (5) A. Novi-Belgii; or (6) A. puniceus.

When the stem leaves are narrowed or rounded at the base, but not conspicuously clasping; if the involucre is 5 mm. or less high, and the heads paniculate, the plant is (7) A. salicifolius. But if the involucre is more than 5 mm high, and the heads have inconspicious rays, the plant is (8) A. subulatus) or (9) A. frondosus.

Lastly when the stem leaves are lanceolate or brooder; if the heads are in flat-topped corymbs and the leaves entire (not toothed), the plant is (10) A. umbellatus.. But if the heads are paniculate or racemose, the involucre. 5 mm or less high and the leaves serrate in the middle, the plant is (11) A lateriflorus. And if the plant has the involucre more than 5 mm high and the leaves coarsely dentate, your plant is (12) A. acuminatus.

The above it will be noted is a kind of key, a sort of first aid to students in a difficult group. Afterwards it will be necessary to check your observations by one of the standard Manuals (Grays or Briton's)

A little Nonsense

I once looked over the book of a medical student, who was studying at Edinburgh University: he had written the following gem on the front page of each:—

Si quisquid furetur this little libellum,
Per Phoebem, per Jovem, I'll kill him, I'll fell him;
In ventris illius I'll stick my scalpellum.

And teach him to steal my little libellum!

A bontanist gave me this description of the sepals of the English wild rose: they are five in number; two run to a simple point, two have the point entirely surrounded by soft bristles, and one has bristles on one side only. It is thought that this riddle on the subject was made up by the monks of old:—

Quinque sumus fratres,
Sub eodem tempore nati;
Sunt duo barbati,
Duo sunt sine barba creati,
Unus barbatus
Sed barba dimidiatus.

Translated:-"We are five brothers born at the same time; two are bearded, two were created without beards, one is bearded but the beard is halved."

A writer in a newspaper having stated that there was no rhyme for month, nor for orange, some genius sent in this:—

From the Indus to the Biorenje
Came the Jajah in a month,
Eating now and then an orange
Conning now and then his Grunth.

The Grunth sometimes spelt Granth—is understood to be the sacred book of the Hindoos—maybe)

"We are all socialists now," said a British statesman; but time was when they were as unpopular as the Reds:—

The socialists are peculiar,
They very of unruly are:
But if quakers were to riot you'd
Have reason for disquietude.

And as a finish here's an old Scottish nursery rhyme, where in the dog asks the cat:

"Pussiky, pussiky, wow;
Whaur'll we get banes to chow?"
(Cat) "We'll gang to the bog,
And worry a hog
And then we'll hae banes enow!"

A hog, in Scotland, is a young ram under a year old; a hogget is a second year sheep.
