The Acute Fuel Area

FIVE of Canada's nine provinces contain vast resources in coal, actually 17 per cent of the world's total supply.

The two most populous provinces, Ontario and Quebec, contain no coal. These two provinces contain 60 per cent of the population and 80 per cent of the industries of Canada.

All the provinces except two, use Canadian coal almost exclusively.

Only one whole province, Ontario, and part of Quebec, do not use Canadian coal. Only Ontario depends wholly upon alien coal producers for her supply.

From the western boundary of Ontario to the Ottawa river is what Dr. Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines, describes as the "Acute fuel area of Canada" because Ontario depends almost entirely upon the United States, and that source of supply may give out at any time. Montreal district and about 100 mile east in Quebec, while not wholly dependent upon United States coal, still use a considerable quantity.

Central Ontario in 1923 consumed 14,859,000 tons of coal, all imported. Quebec imported in 1923 a total of 6,517,000 tons.

Nova Scotia coal areas alone contain enough mineable coal to supply Ontario and Quebec at present rate of consumption, for more than half a century.

Nova Scotia coal is used as far west as Montreal. In Montreal it competes successfully with American coal.

Why, then, should Ontario and Quebec send out of the country over a hundred and nineteen million dollars a year to build up alien business instead of keeping that money in Canada?

If these two provinces used only Nova Scotia coal they would add not less than a quarter of a million to the population of Nova Scotia—250,000 new consumers of food, clothing, shoes, furniture and other life necessities to be supplied by the manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec.

That is how Ontario and Quebec can help to build Canada—by burning Nova Scotia coal in our homes and factories.
