LORRAINE MAKES A FOURTH AT LUNCHEON CHAPTER LXXXII.

When we drew up to the curb in front of the restaurant Neil and Mr. Frederick were just turning in. They saw us and helped me alight. Then Neil said to Lorraine: "Aren't you coming, too?" "I wasn't asked?" she replied smiling.

"You are asked now, Miss Morton, please join us." Mr. Frederick quickly responded.

"If you all really want me, I should be delighted."

"Take it for granted that we do, Lorraine and come along." Neil took her arm and they walked ahead of Mr. Frederick and me so giving him a chance to say:

"We will not be able to talk, but perhaps it is just as well. I like you and—Forbes to be seen with her."

"She is a dear," I returned, "just as the waiter showed us to the table which had been reserved, adding another place."

"See! I wasn't expected!" Lorraine bantered.

As is always the case when one's mind is filled with a certain subject, the conversation veered around to business before we had finished our luncheon. Lorraine seemed terribly interested, and asked several intelligent questions which showed her familiarity with terms used in talking of monetary affairs. Neil was explaining a certain deal he was about to take up to Frederick. He seemed to me to be trying to impress his listener with the probity of the deal.

I tried to grasp what was being said, but most of it was over my head.

"Have you seen this tract?" Mr. Frederick said.

"No," Neil flushed, "but Tearle has. He brings glowing accounts of its possibilities."

"Will you wait until I have investigated it. I wouldn't take Tearle's word under oath." Someone had just spoken to Lorraine, as they passed so she did not hear, although Mr. Frederick had lowered his voice—I knew for that purpose.

"It is too late. The prospectus has already gone out."

"When?"

"About a week ago. We have had several returns, hundreds of inquiries. The country is prosperous. People are anxious to invest their money."

"And Tearle tells them how." It was the first sarcastic speech I ever had heard Mr. Frederick make.

"Come you two, you must stop talking business when you have ladies with you," I hastened to say. I saw a look on Neil's face which I recognized, one he invariably had when he was beginning to get angry or impatient.

"That's right, Mrs. Forbes. We aren't very polite," Mr. Frederick answered, while Neil looking relieved, turned to Lorraine. "I'll see your husband in his office later." I knew he had added that to let me know he would not so easily give up helping me, and attempting to make Neil see things as he wanted him to.

The remainder of the luncheon passed pleasantly. Before we rose from the table Lorraine said: "Won't you and Mr. Frederick dine with me one night, when ever it is convenient to you men of business?"

"That will be lovely!" I hastened to say. "I would know that Neil was not with Blanche Orton for that night, and I should enjoy dining with Lorraine and her father. It flashed over me that Mr. Frederick would be sure to make a good impression, and that as he was a friend of Neil's it would help Neil. Little did I think that the lunch, his acceptance of Lorraine's invitation were both because of that very idea. He knew that Neil would soon need friends. He also knew that it helped him to be seen with nice people.

But not until years afterwards did I learn all that this man had done for us.

Hindenburg Retires To Private Life

(Special to The Guardian) BERLIN, May 3.—Field Marshal Von Hindenburg has written President Ebert announcing his intention to retire to private life during the transitional period. Says Von Hindenburg: "I considered it my duty to serve the fatherland but with the conclusion of a preliminary peace my task will be fulfilled and my desire to retire in view of my advanced age will be universally understood, the more so because it is known how hard I have become for me in view of my opinions and my entire personality and the past to continue to exercise my office."

Herr Ebert replied assenting to the request of the Field Marshal and expressing the undying thanks of the German people for Von Hindenburg's self sacrifice.

Satisfaction Re Empire Preference

(Special to the Guardian) LONDON, May 3.—Reuters learns there is a general feeling of satisfaction in Dominion circles in regard to the movements toward imperial preference. Sir George Perley, Canadian High Commissioner, said the Government and people of Canada will be much pleased at Great Britain adopting the principal of Empire preference. He was of the opinion it would cause increased trade between the various parts of the Empire, and afford Canada an opportunity of supplying goods to the British markets which formerly came from enemy countries. Sir George said it is a step towards making the Empire self-supporting, Mr. Schreiner, agent general for South Africa, said that all parts and all the peoples of South Africa would welcome this first step in a direction in which they had long hoped to see the mother country moving. It afforded an opportunity for South Africa mean wines and spirits and would likely be productive of great mutual benefit. He hoped the step would result in strengthening Empire relations. Mr. McKenzie, agent general for New Zealand said the step was in the direction of the aspirations of New Zealand and hoped the new departure which at present was limited would develop. Anyhow it would enable the British people to negotiate with other relations on a more equitable basis.
