The regular meeting of the Summerside Town Council was held last night. Councilor Sobey was granted two months leave of absence from June 1st to August 1st.

It was decided to put in two concrete crossings on Water Street, one near the railway station and another at Strong's corner. It was decided also to continue the sewer from Fanning's to McKay's corner.

The May Nannery Co. will present the powerful society drama, The Diplomats at Market Hall. This is probably the strongest piece ever seen here. It is one of New York's greatest successes having enjoyed a run there for one solid year. Regarding this piece The St. John Telegraph says—"It is one of the strongest plays ever seen here, and the audience testified to that fact by the hearty applause, there being several curtain calls."

Of Miss Hatch the same paper says—"Miss Hatch possesses a wonderful voice of surpassing richness, and well deserved the encores given her."

During the storm on Sunday the dwelling house of Edward Simmons, Lot 16 was struck by lightning and badly damaged. The lightning struck the fin and shattered it and tore a large hole in the roof. Mr. Simmons had just retired and his son occupied an adjoining room. The window in the boy's room was completely broken off. In the room occupied by Mr. Simmons the electric current passed through the wall about a foot from his head. Mr. Simmons' daughter aged fourteen and two neighbors children were sitting in the kitchen when the debris from the shattered wall fell alongside of them but they escaped injuries. Mr. Simmons and his son were both stunned for a short time.

INTERIOR PORTUGAL

MUCH MORE ART AND PURITY OF DIRT TO BE FOUND.

Some Interesting Impressions by an Observer
Traveler - Description of a Journey in the Old Little Kingdom - Some Things That King Edward Did Not See and Sample During His Last Visit.

If King Edward had prolonged his visit to Portugal and visited the interior, he would have experienced some of the roughest traveling of his life, and if he could be conceived of as stopping at the so-called hotels of the country he would also have slept in some of the most doubtful beds of his life and sampled perhaps the very worst cookery.

Estremoz is a town in the interior of the country in the Province of Alentejo. As you approach it by rail from Lisbon you see it standing upon a hill in the distance, Moorish pictures and inviting. When you reach the station, however, you find the town itself of Estremoz is two miles away, and like the journey of life, the road leads uphill all the way. It is a wretchedly bad road too. There is only one hotel in the town and a very poor one. Some of the bedrooms open on the dining-room. They are mere dark dens without windows.

The streets of Estremoz are sociable and barnyard-like. On Friday droves of pigs and goats are "shoed" through the streets to the market place and confined until Saturday morning, market day. Not all the pigs and goats are kept over, however. Some of them are sold at once on Friday, and the sale is clinched immediately by the slaughter on the spot in the open street of the hapless kid or squealing pig. This public killing is enough to make a sensitive soul forswear flesh eating, but the natives mind it not at all, neither the health authorities, if there are any.

And yet this same dirty, miserable town would delight the soul of the artist. As in most Latin race towns, dirt and high art flourish together. There are probably more marble and marble carving in Estremoz than in any other small city. In the old houses are marble halls and carved marble staircases that would give beauty to the palaces of kings. From marble public fountains the water gushes. Marble seats along the roads give rest to tramp and beggar. If Estremoz had paved streets, the paving would be marble, too, but it has few of these. Like all old Latin towns, Estremoz has its public square, around which important buildings are grouped.

One cannot find out why it is, but rather oddly almost the cleanest and best of the common people of Portugal are the peasant population around Estremoz. It has been said of them that they are "very honest and hard working and very clean." Their rude stone cottages are whitewashed continually inside and out, and there seems to be something of the neatness and thrift of the old time Holland Dutch about middle south Portugal land folk.

Different it is in northern Portugal. There the houses are dirty and the people are dirty. Perhaps this sadly unpleasant condition of things may be accounted for by the fact that the women apparently do all the hard outdoor work. The coarse, constant drudgery seems to crush out of them the womanly instinct of cleanliness and tidiness even if they had any time to tidy up their houses. These poor northern women are real beasts of burden, carrying their loads upon their heads instead of drawing them as horses and oxen do.

With good roads and decent hotels Portugal would soon become a favorite touring region. The climate is agreeable; its fruits are delicious. Upon the slopes of Alentejo great olive orchards abound. The wines of Portugal were famous before America was discovered. It is so little known to the tourist that it can furnish all the novelty which the wealthy tourist seems to be forever seeking.

As it is, however, the traveler in the primitive little kingdom must put up with discomforts and the absence of conveniences that civilized globe trotters demand. Lisbon, Oporto and other leading cities swarm with those beggars and human deformities which are a revolting feature of all Latin race countries except France. Occasionally you see in your cable news the announcement that smallpox is ravaging Oporto. Well, in Oporto itself no uncommon sight is patients in the early stages of smallpox walking freely about the streets and riding in street cars. And, like the Latin races again, the Portuguese are awfully cruel to dumb brutes. You will see here the brutes that can speak forcing draft oxen up the steep streets with a sharp iron spike stuck into the end of a club.

My hat came out today. It's a fair view. It stopped. It's from coming out and restored the color. M. D. Gray, No. 25, St. John's Street, Mass.
