Hay may be somewhat light especially the old meadows.

Grain crops and vegetables are making very good progress with the limited moisture so beneficial to plant growth.

Mrs. E. J. McFadyen, with her family of Boston, Mass., are visiting at her former home, Peter's Road, with her sister, Miss Lucy Johnston and Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Johnston.

The Peter's Road, Presbyterian S. S. is re-organized on Sunday 7th inst. with a very good attendance of pupils and teachers. Mr. W. L. McLean was appointed superintendent.

Mr. John Finlay, a former resident of Cambridge Road, and now residing in Arlington, Mass., is visiting his native province, and at present is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. McKinnon, Peter's Road.

The Murray Harbor North Dairying Co. with their cheese factory at Sturgeon, is going strong this year. The factory has stood up against many adversities in the long history of its existence, but it has lived to see an era of prosperity which is pleasing to its patrons and a credit to the promoters and the efficient management in charge.

Miss Ethel Johnston, R. N., of the Royal Victoria, Montreal, with party have arrived at the old home, Peter's Road, for the holiday season. They were met in Charlottetown by Miss Johnston's brother, Louis, of Montague, and from there all motored to Peter's Road, where they will be the guests of Mrs. A. M. Johnston during their sojourn in the province.

The new cemetery at Peter's Road has been much improved in appearance by the recent work of renovation—trimming, path-making and the completion of the ornamental section. The fence has been painted very artistically in becoming colors. Much praise is due the manager, Mr. Neil VanDerstine, for his excellent supervision, and to the people in general for their hearty co-operation in carrying out this important work of beautifying the hallowed precincts of the departed.

The heavy rain of Monday worked wonders with the crops and left the farmers in this vicinity in "high good humor."

The trustees of Springfield have engaged Miss Beatrice Yeo, Northam, as school teacher for Springfield for the ensuing year.

We congratulate Mr. Patrick Lambe, Springfield, on the purchase of a new Ford car. At present he is erecting a garage on his premises.

Mr. Cecil Hughes, Norboro, who recently sustained the loss of his valuable barn by lightning is busy erecting another one, which promises to be larger and more modern than the one which was burned.

The many friends of little Miss Caroline Sinclair, daughter of Hon. Peter and Mrs. Sinclair of Summerside, who underwent an operation for appendicitis in the Prince County Hospital, are pleased to learn that she is well on the road to recovery.

Mr. John A. Croken, Emerald, popular mail courier on the Emerald via Clifton route, had the misfortune on Saturday evening to lose a valuable horse. The animal strayed out of its pasture onto the railroad and was struck by a train. Two of its legs were severed from its body and the suffering animal had to be shot.

A large sale was held on Tuesday, July 9th, on the property formerly owned by the late Mr. Archibald Ferguson, Summerside. It being an old homestead, everything to be found on a well equipped farm was sold and realized good prices. The sale was conducted in an up-to-date manner by Mr. Hugh Morrison, Kensington.

Mr. Archibald MacGregor, of Lot 16 has purchased the valuable farm formerly owned by the late Mr. Archibald Ferguson, Summerside. The annual examination of Springfield School was held in the school-room on Friday, June 28th, with a large number of parents and visitors present. The various classes were ably examined by Miss Agnes White, teacher, Mrs. Hyatt Haslam and Mr. Matthew White, and showed by their ready answers that they had been carefully tutored during the year. Public School Certificates were awarded to Miss Hazel Somers and Master Clarence Haslam. At the close

An Attic.... Salt-Shaker

A PRETTY little equine romance revealed by William S. Hart, the screen actor—otherwise known as "Bill"—has as its principals Hart's famous pinto horse, Fritz and Cactus Kate, a mare, well-known to movie-fans in days gone by for her unique bucking ability. She was an "outlaw." During a long lay-off Fritz formed a great attachment for Cactus Kate.

CAME the day for Hart to make his picture "Sand." Fritz was taken to the desert outside of Victoryville. Kate was left in the corral. The scene was ready. The cameras all in position. Hart went to mount Fritz, but there was nothing doing that time. The little fellow saw red. Smash! Crash! Away went the cameras, propelled by flying hoofs. Fritz was stark, staring mad.

FOLLOWED a consultation. Hart had a brain-wave.

"Boys," said he to the cameramen, "I may be a damn fool, but let's try it. Send for Kate."

Kate came. Fritz rubbed noses with her. She watched him work as only he could work; just as she had to watch him work in every scene afterwards.

"How proud Fritz was when he and Cactus Kate were loaded in trucks to go to location," purrs Bill. "The little rascal knew what it meant and he knew his ability to show off in front of Kate."

"And there are those who say that horses do not understand," adds Hart (in "My Life—East and West.")

AND showing what real love will do, even with the wildest equine natures—and Cactus Kate, before she met and fell in love with Fritz, was a terror—Kate became as docile as a high-school mare. Nothing would persuade her, or provoke her, to make even a single jump. That was eight years ago.

Do horses understand?

AN amusing occasion during the World War when Field Marshal Douglas Haig had some dry fun with dear old Marshal Joffre was a luncheon party at Haig's Headquarters. In the party were King George, the Prince of Wales, M. Poincare, M. Painleve and, of course, Marshals Joffre and Haig. Now King George had taken the pledge for the duration of the War, and out of respect for that pledge, no wine was served at the luncheon.

SOON "Papa" Joffre was observed looking about for the waiter and meaningly eyeing his empty wine-glass.

"I think Marshal Joffre wants the bread," said Haig to the waiter, with a twinkle in his eye.

The waiter offered the bread to Joffre who took a piece though he didn't really want it. Still looking at his empty glass, "Papa" gave a little cough and a lift of his eyebrows.

"I knew perfectly well what the old gentleman wanted—I had served him so often," chuckled the waiter—Sergeant Secrett—telling the story in "Twenty-five Years With Earl Haig."

THEN the entire was served with Joffre still looking dubiously at his wine glass.

"I think Marshal Joffre wants some more bread!" again said Haig, obviously enjoying the little comedy.

"Papa" took another piece but looked as if he would have liked to throw it at someone.

After luncheon Haig's private secretary took Joffre on one side, explained the circumstances and offered amends if the Marshal would step into an adjoining room. But the old gentleman wouldn't. If he couldn't have a glass of wine with his meal in a reasonable manner, he wasn't going to have a surreptitious one afterwards. He could easily wait until he returned to his own headquarters.

A FAVORITE gathering place for students and tourists in Paris is the Cafe des Deux Magots. The cafe is an old one and the story is of the examination a treat of candy, given by the teacher, was enjoyed by all present. A short address of farewell to Miss White was read by Miss Dorothy Mayne and Miss Hazel Somers presented a token of remembrance for which Miss White briefly and fittingly thanked the pupils. Remarks were then made by some of the visitors and the afternoon was brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the King."

Mr. Emmet Dunn, Springfield, was a visitor to Charlottetown on Monday.—E.

Paris Dines—of a wit of other days who became annoyed with his waiter and called for the proprietor. The latter, however, took the waiter's part.

"Let me speak to your associate," demanded the irate guest.

"My associate? I have no associate."

"Then," demanded the other, "why do you call your place Cafe of the two maggots?"

UNTIL 1927 women were not allowed in the gambling rooms at Deauville and they tell a story—I ran across it in Basil Woon's "From Deauville to Monte Carlo"—about a very unlucky player who refused to leave "the rooms" when his wife sent for him. Note after note was passed in to him but he ignored them all. Finally, in desperation, she changed her tactics and wrote:

Sir: If you wish to know where your wife is at this moment, go to the Royal Hotel to the room of Count de S—.

A Friend.

THE husband read the note, frowned blackly, half-rose from his chair, then settled back again. "Lucky in love, unlucky at cards!" He had been unlucky at cards all night. Perhaps now—

He redoubled his betting and won a million.

NEXT morning he said nothing of the incident to his wife, who was inwardly seething. And that afternoon the Count de S—, who had never even met the wife, received a huge bouquet of flowers from an anonymous admirer. The puzzled count found a card attached to the roses. It said simply:

"Thanks."

THE genuine poetical turn and the studied affectation of Oscar Wilde's character are well illustrated in this hitherto unpublished incident related by Frederic Whyte (in his biography of William Heinemann, the publisher). Whyte had gone to Paris to see the author of "Salome" about some work he was to do for Heinemann. He found Oscar wearing deep mourning and looking very melancholy.

NATURALLY Whyte thought Wilde was suffering from some recent and cruel bereavement and cautiously ventured an inquiry on the delicate subject, only to receive this unexpected reply:

"This happens to be my birthday, and I am mourning (as I shall henceforth do on each of my anniversaries) the flight of one year of my youth into nothingness, the growing blight upon my summer."

IT was George du Maurier, famous artist and author of "Trilby," who—as Mr. Whyte reminds us—remarked at a "Punch" dinner: "Fellow will write me down as de Maurier; I wish they'd give the devil his du."

THAT King Edward had a keen sense of humor is common knowledge. Here is a story about him told by Princess Daisy of Fless (in her Memoirs.) Princess Daisy, by the way, is a daughter of Colonel Cornwallis West, and a sister of Constance, Duchesse of Westminster.

The Wests had a house in the New Forest. Now to get on with the story:

"We were a lively family," reminisces Princess Daisy. "King Edward, who loved us all, christened us the 'Wild West Show' and once sent a telegram addressed to 'the Wild West Show, New Forest,' which safely reached us."

Not so bad.

THE seemingly impossible has happened. John D. Rockefeller has been "done" in oil! It appears that the Standard Oil genius has sat—unknowingly, I'll be bound—to John K. Winkler, a knight of the pen, or typewriter, and the result is a work of art, entitled "John D.—A Portrait in Oils." But what especially interests me is that "Winkler dubs John D. an 'inveterate raconteur.' I never even suspected it."

ONE of Mr. Rockefeller's favorite stories (says Winkler) is about an old negro, arraigned in court on a charge of vagrancy, who gave his name as John D. Rockefeller. Scratching his grizzled poll in perplexity at the outburst of laughter, the old darky exclaimed:

"Yassah, dat's mah real name an' it's been a trial to me mah life, judge yuh honah."

ANOTHER is the tale of the timid soul whose wife drove him under the bed with the blunt end of a broom. He peeked out and when she threatened further punishment, he said stalwartly:

"You can't bulldoze me! So long as I've got the spirit of a man I'll take a peek."

BUT the oil king's pet yarn, according to Winkler, concerns a nervous woman passenger on a train who as a climax to a hundred foolish questions, asked the conductor:

"Conductor, why do you wave your hand when you want the train to start?"

"Oh," replied the tormented man, "when I wave my hand that means get the hell out of here."

SOMEONE who overheard the conductor's tart answer warned him that the nervous woman was the wife of a director.

"Phew!" exclaimed the conductor, "guess I better apologize."

He paused at the woman's seat, took off his hat and began a fulsome apology.

"She didn't say anything," explains John D. "She just waved her hand." Pouring oil on troubled water.

IT was in the days when the new railroad was pushing through the country of the plains Indians (yarns William MacLeod Raine in "Famous Sheriffs and Western Outlaws.") that a drunken cowboy got on a train at a way station in Kansas. John Bender, the conductor asked him for his ticket. He had none, but he pulled out a handful of gold pieces.

"I wanta—g-go to—h-hell," he hiccupped. Bender did not hesitate an instant. "Get off at Dodge. One dollar, please."
