

Felt Tired and Miserable

"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for miserable and tired feelings and it gave me strength to do my work. My nerves are better and I feel well and strong and have a good appetite. I sleep well and am in pretty good spirits and able to work every day now. I recommend the Vegetable Compound and you may use this letter as a testimonial."

ANNE'S CAMPAIGN

Anne was considering her campaign. It had gone beautifully so far. There had been no single false move. She was sure that Richard now thought of her as a woman, once a girl whom he had admired, recovered from the madness of fast living old enough to be companionable, experienced enough to meet his every need. There remained only to show him her grace and ability as a hostess, the help she could be to him in a social way as mistress of his fortune.

Of course there would be the bother of waiting for a divorce—but he could accomplish that quickly enough in Paris these days. To do Anne justice it must be admitted that she had come to care for Richard as much as her selfish nature permitted. She not only saw him now as a rich socially valuable husband, but as a handsome, attractive, satisfying man. As his wife her life would be complete. And she felt quite sure that within the year she would be signing her name, "Mrs. Richard Ross."

"That night when Richard came for her she said: 'I think I'll give a big dinner dance, Dick. The season is over, of course, but the people who are left in town are good fun and some of the others can come in from Long Island. I'll make just one big splash before we close the town house.'"

"Good idea," Richard commented. "Didn't know you went in much for the big hurrahs." "Oh, they're after all part of one's duty—don't you think?" "I suppose so," Richard agreed absently.

Bob West joined them at dinner. "Look here, you two, Dick hasn't seen that new dancer, Mademoiselle, yet. They'll be closing the theatre for the summer soon. Let's go tonight. I've seen her half a dozen times, but she is the real goods, my friends. What say?"

Richard, conscious of Anne at his side, felt no premonition of excitement as the stage was darkened for Yvonne's first number. She was merely another good dancer who had from all reports an unusually clever mind and an attractive personality.

"But assuredly," Yvonne answered with a smile, the purity of her English enhanced by a faint and delightful hint of accent. "But—but," Anne tried to recover. "You look so young—so—"

"Indeed, I do," said Anne now completely recovered, "and one is as charming as the other." "You are kind," Yvonne answered gravely. "You have given us all so much pleasure this season with your dancing," Anne went on, "that I have come to beg you to honor me by attending a small dinner. I am giving next week. There will be only a few guests, all of them your admirers, and I've—well I've counted a lot on your being able to come."

Yvonne sensed a change in Anne. She looked younger, happier, and a cold fear gripped Yvonne's heart. Would Richard be at the party? She took a grave risk in accepting if he were to be there. But how fascinating to accept the invitation and see for herself. "I cannot promise," she said. "But if it is possible, I will come. I must arrive directly from the theatre—"

Richard was puzzled at the interest he felt in Mademoiselle the dancer. Her graceful figure stayed in his mind that night and the next morning, dressing for the day, he easily conjured up a vision of her lovely face.

"It's just the way she's made up probably," he told himself. But he felt a real interest in whether Anne would be able to persuade the dancer to come to her party.

He was to take Anne to tea that afternoon. She planned, he knew to call on Mademoiselle that very morning. All day he felt a strange impatience to learn the outcome of her visit.

Meantime Anne, dressed correctly for the morning, had sent in her card at Yvonne's apartment. Being asked to wait in the living room she looked about her with interest. Here was nothing exotic and heavy and luxurious as one would expect to find in the rooms of a dancer. All was simple, restrained, wholesome and in excellent taste. Withal there was evidence that money had been spent lavishly to attain the coveted simplicity of effect.

Nor was Anne prepared for the charming young girl who came in a few minutes later and greeted her. From the curls, clinging flatly to her head, to the tips of her delicately modeled feet, Yvonne was the picture of a jeune fille.

"This, this is not Mademoiselle, the dancer?" Anne asked inquiringly, taking the hand which Yvonne gave her. "But assuredly," Yvonne answered with a smile, the purity of her English enhanced by a faint and delightful hint of accent.

"But—but," Anne tried to recover. "You look so young—so—"

"Indeed, I do," said Anne now completely recovered, "and one is as charming as the other." "You are kind," Yvonne answered gravely. "You have given us all so much pleasure this season with your dancing," Anne went on, "that I have come to beg you to honor me by attending a small dinner. I am giving next week. There will be only a few guests, all of them your admirers, and I've—well I've counted a lot on your being able to come."

St. John Churches Unite for Summer

ST. JOHN, June 25.—The first of the united services of city churches commencing their summer schedule were held Sunday when the congregations of Centenary, Queen Square, and St. David's churches attended St. David's church, the pulpit of which was occupied by Rev. J. H. Tomkinson of the Wesley Memorial church in Moncton.

Rev. Hugh Miller of St. David's church conducted the services in the Wesley Memorial church in Moncton where he was also the special preacher at the Masonic service.

The three uniting congregations will attend service in St. David's church on June 30 and July 7 and 14. They will have services in Queen Square church on July 21 and 28 and August 4 and 11. H. C. Rice will be the preacher. On August 18 and 25, and Sept. 1 the services will be held in Centenary church, and Rev. Dr. A. S. Rogers will be the preacher.

The choir and organist of the church in which the uniting congregations are meeting will lead the music.

German Street Baptist church and St. Andrew's church congregations gathered in the Baptist church in the morning and in St. Andrew's church in the evening, and Rev. Dr. S. S. Poole, pastor of the Baptist church was the preacher. The organist and choir of the Baptist church led in the music. Rev. J. S. Bonnell, minister of St. Andrew's church will take charge of the services from the first Sunday in July until the second Sunday in September, when the two congregations have completed their summer program. Throughout the period of united services for these two congregations they will attend the Baptist church in the morning and at St. Andrew's church in the evening.

Many of the Sunday schools commenced summer schedules also and met in the morning instead of the afternoon.

Rollo Bay and Vicinity

The annual meeting of the ratepayers of Rollo Bay West School district took place Tuesday, June 18th, with a fair attendance. There were also several ladies present, members of the Women's Institute. A very satisfactory statement of the year's work was read by the Secretary, Mr. Temple Whalen. A discussion took place on school improvements and ways and means for raising money. It was decided to hold a social during the school holidays. Much regret is felt owing to the resignation of the teacher, Miss Donahoe.

Mr. Alphonse Deagle, Bear River South was to Fortune recently on a business trip.

Mr. Peter J. MacCormac, Rollo Bay West was a visitor to Souris River Sunday.

The many friends of Mr. Cornelius Peters, Bear River South, will be sorry to hear that he has been confined to his home for some time with a severe attack of tonsillitis.

Mrs. John E. Mallard arrived home a few days ago and is spending the summer at her old home, New Zealand.

Miss Mary Belle MacGaugh arrived home from Boston this week and will spend the summer months at her home, Bear River South.
