

The Man Who Originated

MR. JAMES DOAN.

Doan's Kidney Pills.

In 1885 Mr. James Doan, the well-known druggist of Kingsville, Ont., first manufactured and sold Doan's Kidney Pills. That was many years before any other kidney remedy in pill form had been put upon the market. Doan's Kidney Pills, therefore, are the original Kidney Pills, and this statement can be backed up by sworn proof. Nowadays these pills have many imitators. Some imitate the name, others the wrapper, but none can imitate the pill itself, whose intrinsic merit in curing kidney complaints from the simplest backache to the severest Bright's disease, has made it a household necessity from the Atlantic to the Pacific. FOREIGN SPECTATORS OF THE WAR.

A German general of some prominence who had a while ago indulged in a severe criticism of the British conduct of the war in South Africa, recently in a public manner retreated what he had said. He is now satisfied that a German or continental army would hardly have done better than the British had done under the new and hard conditions existing. The fact is that while the military authorities of continental countries are eager spectators of the conflict, they have cause to realise that war is no longer what it was in the days of past European struggles.

The magazine rifle with longer range and greater rapidity of fire, has come in, and with it the rapid firing field gun, all using smokeless powder. There is no longer the veil of smoke to conceal the battery or the line of infantry volleying on the plain, revealing the enemy's position on the distant hill or concealed in the trenches at its base. The attacking force is smitten by an unseen enemy. Entrenched positions have made each battle partake of the nature of a siege, and in the process siege guns of great weight must be dragged to mountain tops and placed in positions hitherto thought to be inaccessible to other than the lighter field guns.

The great range of rifles and artillery has made it impossible to practically reconnoitre the enemy's position and ascertain his location or strength. The artillery duel is fought at distances of two to five miles. Scouting has become doubly perilous from concealed sharpshooters who pick off a horseman at 1,500 to 2,000 yards. Field trenches have multiplied to an extent hitherto unknown. Barbed wire entanglements, first used on our side in the defence of Mafeking, have been since largely turned to account by the enemy at Magersfontein and Colenso. And, more embarrassing than all, our foot soldiers have been confronted with an army wholly made up of mounted infantry, all of whom are expert sharpshooters, with all the mobility of cavalry. The Boer is the Centaur of the veldt, half horse, half man.

For the first time in modern warfare officers have been compelled to abandon all the insignia of rank, to lay aside their swords and carry rifles into battle, while all distinctions of color among officers and men are merged in one sombre shade of Khaki. But for this the enormous fatalities among officers which characterised the earlier battles of the war would have speedily left our soldiers without leaders. And to all the difficulties and disabilities already referred to are added the topography of a country which naturally lends itself to defence; a population hostile to the British cause and vast distances of sea and land transport. In ocean transport alone difficulties have been met and overcome on such a scale as was never before attempted.

It is not surprising under these conditions that our advance has been slow and that we have met with some sad losses. The enormous difficulties of the British undertaking, the new and surprising conditions developed by the conflict, and the steady courage and fortitude with which the British soldiery have met them, have come now to be recognized by military observers of every nation. The war has afforded an intensely interesting study to all military men, and some of the most observing foresee that it will lead to changes in military organization and tactics that must be almost revolutionary. In the meantime the military nations are becoming more and more content to remain passive spectators of a war from which they have so much to learn.

More recent maps show two drifts of ferries across the Tugela River, some five miles further east than Potgieters. These are named respectively Maritz Ferry and Skiel Drift. A road leads between Spearman's Farm, Buller's late headquarters, and the southern side of Zwarts Kop to Maritz Ferry, thence across the river and north-eastward to Ladysmith. It may be, if an advance is now being made by Gen. Buller that it is along this route.

Mr. Chamberlain made a stirring and hopeful speech in the Commons on Monday last, in course of which he frankly admitted that some mistakes had been made in regard to the war. But looking to the future he sees success assured. "We are pouring men into South Africa," he said. "In a little time we shall have 200,000 men there and as many mounted men as there are mounted Boers." He concluded with a glowing tribute to the colonies, and a forecast of that great federation of our race which must inevitably make for peace liberty and justice.

As will be seen by the brief report in another column the Full Electric Company at their special meeting have decided to make important additions to their power and will thus be prepared to extend their operations and furnish stronger lights than heretofore. This progressive Company may also be in a position to compete for the street lighting of the city, which service is in need of improvement. In any case our citizens will welcome the efforts of the Full Electric to let its light shine conspicuously in our midst.
