—In 11 of the largest Lancastrian cities a total of 7,224 stores were visited. It was found that 3,129 were already selling Empire-made butter; but after the visit the total rose to 5,312.

"The board are of the opinion," says the report, "that market promotion by retail canvass affords a most promising method of extending the consumption of Empire produce in this country. The district which was selected for experimental purposes in the case of the butter canvass was one in which it was known that foreign butters were predominant and where the greatest consumer resistance to such a sales campaign was to be expected."

The young man seated in the dentist chair wore a marvelous shirt of striped silk and an even more wonderful check suit. He also wore the vacant stare that so often goes with both.
