HONORED THE MEMORY OF D'ARCY MCGEE

Leaders of the Nation Paid Eloquent Tribute to Famous Irish Statesman at Chateau Laurier, Ottawa

OTTAWA, April 14.—Close to Parliament Hill, where stands a striking monument to him in bronze and a living testimony to him in the deeds and words of those who today legislate for a federated Canada, stirring and memorable tributes were last night paid to the memory and services of Thomas D'Arcy McGee, Poet, Historian, Orator and Statesman, at a dinner in the Chateau Laurier, on the hundredth anniversary of his birth. The Parliament, the Bench, and the Bar, of the Dominion had their appraisal of the worth of McGee's services splendidly told by eminent representatives of the presence and the utterances of His Excellency the Governor-General symbolized the full fruition of one of McGee's fondest dreams—that of a free united Canada yet maintaining a close relationship and entertaining a warm admiration for the Mother Country.

A Brilliant Assembly

An imposing list of speakers adorned the "De Luxe" program, in whose preparation great skill and an admirable taste were exercised. Over 400 packed the main dining-room of the hotel, and many more hundreds of tickets could have been sold. A generous addition of famous Irish songs and melodies warmed the ears of the audience, and as a happy completion to the elaborate provisions for the function, "loud speakers" were installed in front of the head table so that not only most of the radio Canada could hear some remarkable pieces of eloquence, but relatives of the great patriot who were unable to attend were gathered in an Ottawa home and enabled to receive fully and clearly all that was said.

His Excellency the Governor-General, in a very brief speech, extolled McGee as a patriot, as one who inspired a passionate love for and devotion to his own land and race and who in this respect stood in the same class with Mazzini of Italy, Alexander Hamilton of early American days and Pym and Hampden of earlier English days.

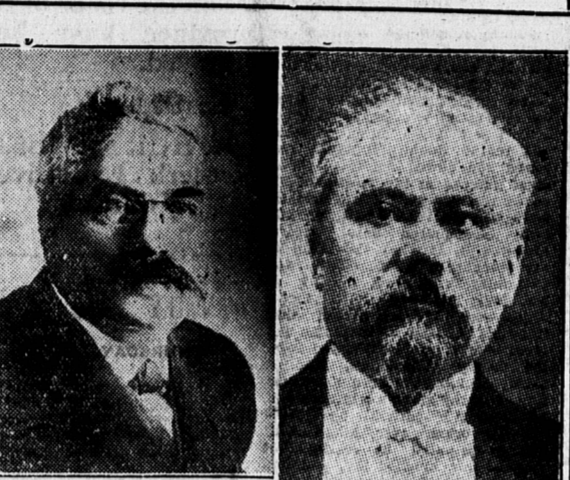

Promoter of Unity

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Speaker of the House of Commons, stressed the enduring services of McGee as a promoter of national unity in Canada and as one who today would dispel the pessimism of those who feared that Confederation might not survive the tests of present day problems. President E. W. Beatty, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, deplored the tendency to sectionalism in the Dominion, and declared that the spirit and the example of McGee would be great factors in overcoming such a movement away from the Confederation idea which dominated the mind of the eminent Irishman. Mr. Beatty brought some loud laughter by a sally whose pointedness few, if any, missed. "I do not know," he said, "what Darcy McGee would have done with the Canadian National Railways, Church Union, Prohibition, and other things which ought to be prohibited, but he would have approached these problems with a spirit that could never recognize disunion, retrogression and other disintegrating agencies."

Three Dominant Factors

The influence of his mother, adversity and industry, were three dominant factors in the life of Darcy McGee, declared the Prime Minister, who also enumerated the main qualities that made for McGee's constructive statesmanship as vision, love for unity and a love of country and race. "McGee was set before us the vision of Canadian Nationality," said the Prime Minister in his concluding sentence, "and it is for us to seek to solidify, to more firmly establish that nationality. It is for us to follow the gleam of his great example. Serene and even justice for all creeds and for all classes is the only mem-

These results are shown in the annual report of the C. N. Railways tabled in the House at six o'clock. The report shows in spite of a decrease in the gross earnings of $17,547,305 due to smaller crop and general business conditions throughout the country, the company was successful in earning a net operating profit of $17,244,251 or $3,188,397 less than in the preceding year and therefore maintained "to a very considerable degree a rate of improvement during 1923, which was a phenomenal year in many respects from a transportation standpoint. The feature of the report is an item which shows operating expenses were reduced by $14,360,907 to effect reduction in gross receipts.

TAKE THE JOB YOURSELVES SAYS RAMSAY

Government Differs From Passing Resolutions at Convention—His Speech Style is Termed "Vein of Insufferable Superiority."

LONDON, April 14.—J. Ramsay MacDonald, former premier, calmly sat and smoked his pipe at the Independent Labor party's convention at Gloucester yesterday while being severely criticized in connection with the late government. Many of the speeches evidently were intended as a challenge to him to go on the platform and defend himself and his former ministerial colleagues, but he allowed them to pass without reply.

Different Story To Tell

However there was a different story to tell today when the attacks were repeated at the Labor convention. Mr. MacDonald at last deigned to take notice of them and in the end he won a gratifying victory over his critics by receiving the congratulations of the majority of the delegates present. Mr. MacDonald's remarks were entirely dispassionate, in striking contrast to some of the speeches which had been made against him. His speech was delivered in the style of what that veteran labor leader, right Hon. G. N. Barnes, ex-M. P., a member of the war cabinet of 1916, 1917 and 1918, once described as "a vein of insufferable superiority which has since become almost habitual."

Puts it up to His Critics

In so many words, Mr. MacDonald told his critics to take the job of the labor leadership themselves and see what they could make of it. He said that during the Labor party's nine months of office, the members of the ministry really had only about one-half the time to themselves. "Government," declared he, is a very different thing from passing resolutions at a convention of the Independent Labor Party. The conception you seem to have of the Labor Government is that it was a body of men and women who had a straight field before them and if they failed to move along they were neglectful of their duty.

Bars Rope Around Neck

Alluding to a question that had been raised as to whether the Labor party ever again should assume office as a minority government, Mr. MacDonald said: "I am not going to put ropes around my neck for other people to pull. If the question arises we shall consider it in relation to the whole circumstances." The convention eventually passed a resolution congratulating the late Labor Government upon its achievements. This was carried by a vote of 398 to 139.
