The Golden Sands Riddle

By Alexander Campbell

Mr. Monte flipped a big hand at a hovering Indian waiter. When the order had been taken and the man had gone, he leaned his arms on the table and peered earnestly at Peter.

"You're sweet on old man Carr's daughter, aren't you?"

The question was so unexpected that for a moment Peter simply sat, staring. Then he got grimly to his feet.

Mr. Monte raised an imploring hand. "Now, for the love of Harry! No offence intended, to you or to Miss Carr. If it'll be any comfort to you," he went on, I'm a—a well, a sort of friend of the family. Of old Carr himself anyway."

He saw disbelief in Peter's eyes, and laughed shortly.

"Don't be a fool! Don't get any funny ideas into your head that you're talking to one of your social inferiors, because you're not! I could buy and sell half a dozen of you!"

"My good man," said Peter patiently. "Your money, real or imagined, doesn't interest me. Why should it? You could be a multi-millionaire, but you still wouldn't have any business poking your nose into my affairs. And that," he added, "is what you seem to have been doing."

Mr. Monte's bluster suddenly collapsed. He began to wave deprecatory hands. His big face was melancholy. He looked up at Peter like a large ugly, beseeching dog.

"For the love of Harry!" he implored. Don't get so mad!"

Peter's retort was interrupted by the arrival of the waiter. Mr. Monte seized his opportunity to speak again as soon as the man had gone.

"Maybe I haven't gone about this business the right way," he said mildly. "I'm no diplomat. Let's put it this way. How would you like to be rich?"

Peter stared.

"No need to ask any up-and-coming young man that, eh? Of course you would! For one thing it would put you in the way of a certain young lady—eh. Ha ha! Well, here are all my cards on the table," said Mr. Monte, abruptly solemn again. "I can make you rich. Not a millionaire, but rich; worth a small fortune. I can; I want to; and if you'll let me, I will."

He raised his glass and nodded to Peter with great amiability. "Well, bung-o!"

Peter proceeded to rise. Mr. Monte paused with his glass half-way to his lips and stared. "Hey! Where are you going? I haven't finished yet."

"You needn't bother," said Peter wearily. "I told you the three card trick or any other game was out. I'm not the sort of greenhorn I appear to be."

"I know!" he went on, raising his hand, as Mr. Monte was about to speak. "You're going to make me rich. A friend of yours has discovered how to make diamonds, or maybe it's gold; all I have to do is to hand over a hundred quid and you'll do the rest. I'm afraid you'll have to pay for the drinks. You ordered them, and it was your invitation. If you'll excuse me——"

Mr. Monte sighed. Then he chuckled. "You're hard to convince, aren't you? Still, I don't blame you. I suppose it does sound a bit phony." He massaged his rough chin. "But here's proof."

He pulled a wallet from his pocket and spilled on the table a sheaf of banknotes whose number and denominations made Peter open his eyes. Then he rose.

"There's a thousand pounds", he said carelessly, as if it had been a handful of coppers. "I'm leaving it there. If you don't pick it up you'll be a darned fool, because someone else will. I'm not giving it to you, though; I'm lending it to you. You can pay it back to me tomorrow. You'll find me at the Orient.

"Now please listen carefully to what you have to do." His voice was sharper and commanding; and Peter, with his eyes still on the incredible pile of notes, listened as if hypnotised.

"Put a trunk call through to Morton and Downey in Johannesburg. They're stock brokers." He glanced at his watch. "You've still got an hour and a half before they close business. Give them my name as a reference and ask them to buy for you a thousand quids' worth of Golden Deeps. These are mining shares; you know that. You probably also know that they've been a drug on the market for eighteen years. But between today and tomorrow morning they're going to hit the ceiling.

"So far as you're concerned, there's no risk attached to it whatever. You have the money there in front of you. It's a loan, not a gift, so you can take it without any qualms of conscience.

"If Golden Deeps fail to perform, then I'm the loser, not you. And you can forget the debt, and use the share certificates to paper the wall of your room with.

"But they won't fail. They're going up—high and fast. And tomorrow you can pay me back my thousand,and keep the balance.

"All I'm doing is giving you a tip, and the money to back it. My money, my judgment. I happen to be backing it myself. If I'm wrong, it's my funeral — and I'll be dropping more than a thousand quid. But I'm not wrong, so everything's all right.

"You've got the name, now? Morton and Downey. So long, son."

And with a flip of his hand Mr. Monte turned and walked out, leaving a very dazed young man contemplating a sheaf of banknotes spilled between two glasses.

Montreal Exchange

MONTREAL, June 5—(CP)—Moderate buying sent a number of leaders into higher ground on the stock market today. Gains outnumbered losses in a ratio of 14 to three.

Strength was displayed in mines, where Hollinger, Hudson Bay Mining, International Nickel and Noranada advanced fractions. Textile issues were also harder. Dominion Textile rising 1 1-2 points and Canadian Cotton preferred a point.

Favorites in utilities industrials, rails and oils also won support. Gainers were Brazilian, Canada Cement, C.P.R. and International Petroleum. Losers included Price Brothers and St. Lawrence Corporation, in papers, and General Steel Wares preferred.

Among miscellaneous stocks appearing, improvements were posted by Zellers, Ogilvie, Wilsils and Laura Secord.

Total sales: 7,500 shares; Industrials, 3,800; Mines, 3,700.

Their First Trip Across The Continent

A few weeks ago three native daughters of Oakland, California—Miss Margaret McInnis, her sister Rita (Mrs. Arnold A. Boscacci), and their aunt, Mrs. Rose Yarrington—decided to see a small portion of eastern United States and Canada. They were quite thrilled when they stepped aboard the "Challenger" of the Southern Pacific Railroad at Oakland Pier bound for Chicago and the East for the first time.

They had heard of Ogden from the school books and maps, but it was not until they arrived there that they found it a real busy city with fine people who wish to make travelers feel at home. A Prince Edward Islander (you find them everywhere) connected with the railway, named Daniel B. MacDonald, formerly of Clermont, had received word of their coming and acting as a reception committee made their short stay in that Utah city a pleasant one, treating them to a good dinner, candy, papers and magazines. The young ladies then continued their journey with expressions of thanks for Mr. MacDonald's kindness.

In Chicago the travelers were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Kilbride and members of their family, who showed them as much of that great city as time would allow. Mr. and Mrs. Kilbride and Mrs. Kilbride's mother, Mrs. Campbell are also from Prince County, P. E. I. They visited Notre Dame Convent and had the pleasure of meeting all the Sisters one of whom Sister St. Wenceslas, was born at Rollo Bay. In this convent, for many years, Sister St. Edwin was a teacher Continuing their trip by train to Detroit, Mrs. Boscacci was not long in securing her new Chrysler which was awaiting her arrival.

From that time on the balance of their trip was made with speed, comfort and satisfaction. The weather was fine, which prompted them to continue on through the Province of Ontario to Montreal. They were delighted with their first entrance into Canada. Snow was still on the hills, the valleys were green, and the old St. Lawrence River "just kept rolling along."

The chief object of the tourists in going to Canada's largest city, was to spend some time with Margaret and Rita's aunt, Rev. Sister St. Edwin, who is at present retired from active teaching. It was a delightful reunion—the first meeting since Sister St. Edwin visited her brother and other relatives in Oakland a few years ago. Margaret, Rita and Mrs. Yarrington spent two days in Montreal. At the Mother House also they had the pleasure of meeting Rev. Sister St. Hilda, a native of Summerside, who has been a member of the Congregation of Notre Dame for many years also Rev. Mother St. Alban, well remembered in Summerside.

In Montreal it was their pleasure to meet the Misses Molly, Nellie, and Kathleen Tompkins and their sister Nette and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. MacPherson, whose relatives live in Oakland. All are from Antigonish, Nova Scotia.

Arriving in Washington, D.C., the tourists saw much of that great city, the Capital of the United States. A telephone call to the McInnis home in Oakland assured them that every thing was going along as usual.

Their next principal stop was at the Grand Canyon of Arizona. Here Mr. Frank A. Kittredge, Superintendent of the Grand Canyon National Park, who at one time was regional officer in the National Parks Service in San Francisco (where Miss Margaret is employed) and Mrs. Kittredge, gave the travelers a warm welcome and showed them all the places of interest in and around that awe-inspiring and world famous wonder.

The tourists arrived home in good season in the new "blue beauty," with many interesting stories to relate about their first trip across the continent.

WORTHWHILE HINTS ON REFINISHING SCREENS

To remove the accumulated corrosion on copper screens before repainting, clean the mesh thoroughly with a fairly strong solution of a good household cleaner. Then apply a coating made with equal parts of exterior varnish and turpentine. Refinish every second season.
