ST. JAMES CHURCH

Rev. Edwin J. White, B. A., St. Matthew's Church, Montreal, conducted the service and preached for the third Sunday in succession. His subject was "Spiritual Priorities", a timely and much appreciated sermon, showing the necessity for giving up things that later we may gain something of even greater value and consequence. He thanked the supply committee of the Kirk Session for permitting him to occupy once more the historic pulpit of St. James. He was a Charlottetown boy, and he had satisfaction in recalling that St. James church was the first in which he preached here after his ordination, having been invited to do so by the reverend Dr. Legate. The soloist was Miss Lena McLeure, and the acting organist, Mrs. Keith Rogers.

ENEMY TURNS

to deliver a mortal blow to the Red army and Soviet economy. Everywhere the Russians fought stubbornly against the enemy thrust, exacting a mounting toll of casualties in men and machines. Their lines appeared to be intact everywhere despite the wedge in the Kotelnikowski sector. The Russians have not said officially how near the battle is to Stalnad, but at one point in the Don Flotw Stalnad is only 48 miles away. It appeared likely that the Germans were as close to the southern arm of their vast nutcracker.

Retreat — Then Fight

In the other major battle of the Caucasus, the Red army continued to roll back southward from Krasnodar toward the Black Sea before overcoming the German enemy forces. The Russians held successive lines as long as possible on the road to the naval base of Novorossiisk and then withdrew to new positions. They also engaged in resolute fighting southeast of Pyatigorsk where the Germans were inching steadily closer to the Gzozny Oil fields, surrounded by unswept enemy forces. The Russians held the Baku pool sheltered by the 18,000-foot Caucasus mountains. The Germans were less than 100 miles from the Gzozny Dericks. A German unit failed to mention the Stalnad battle but said Russian attempts to cross the Don at various points were frustrated. Strong Russian positions and road barriers in the mountainous sections of the Caucasus were asserted to have been penetrated and Russian counter-attacks were claimed repulsed. This drive apparently was south of Krasnodar.

Greatest Effort

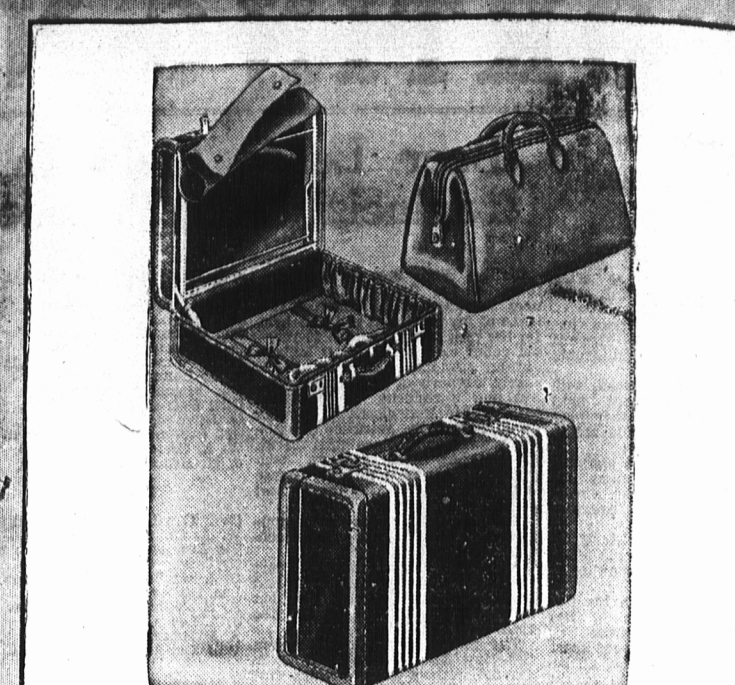

The Germans were making their greatest effort before Stalnad and where success would give them one of their ultimate objectives for the entire 1942 campaign. The assault was aimed at several sectors. The Russians defended themselves under agonizing conditions, a hot west wind and shifting brushfires showering them with ash and debris. The narrow streams in that region are dried up and the wells few and far apart.

Fires Screen Advance

The Germans used the fires as a screen for mechanized attacks but the Russians kept their heads above the trenches. While the flames crackled around them, they directed their own gunfire against the advancing enemy machines. A German tank group broke into the Kotelnikowski sector after several fierce assaults at a point where the Germans had concentrated. The army newspaper Red Star said the Russians counter-attacked swiftly and checked the advance, pinning the tank group down from two sides soon after the break-through. The battle continued to swirl around the new Nazi salient. There Germans made a similar attack with a strong force in another Kotelnikowski sector but Red Star said the Nazis met the most serious reverse. A Russian counter-attack inflicted grave losses and prevented the enemy from making any headway. Red army artillery, which has been the mainstay of defence in the greatest battles of the war, continued to play a predominant role.
