A Fitting Memorial to Lord Tweedsmuir Chief Scout for Canada

— IS —

THE BOY SCOUT CARRY-ON CAMPAIGN

Shortly before his "passing hence," Governor-General Lord Tweedsmuir, Chief Scout, paid this tribute to the Boy Scout Movement: After declaring that he was proud to be Chief Scout for Canada, His Excellency proceeded—

"I am proud of this not merely because of the intimate association it gives me with Canadian Scouts all over the Dominion, but also because the whole idea of scouting embodies the finest traditions of the British race.

"It is because they recognize this that His Majesty the King, and so many members of the Royal Family have given scouting such wholehearted support. For the King, as you know, is patron of the association; the Duke of Connaught has for many years been its president; the Duke of York is president for London and Yorkshire; the Duke of Gloucester is president for Gloucestershire and Norfolk; and the Duke of Kent is Commodore of the Sea Scouts.

"H. G. Wells has said, in a vivid phrase, that we are engaged today in 'a race between education and catastrophe.' Scouting can do, and is doing, a very great deal to decide the issue of that race. The future peace of the world, the future standards of civilization, the future maintenance of right against wrong—these things depend chiefly on the younger generation, and, if you remember that the scouting movement now numbers three million five hundred thousand adherents, and flourishes in more than ninety distinct nations, you will agree with me, I think that the possibilities of scouting exerting a very considerable influence on that younger generation are immense.

"There is, too, one particular aspect of the international problems of the world which scouting can materially affect all over the world. One of the commonest dangers to sound human relationship is the formation early in life of intellectual and moral prejudices against our neighbors. Those who have succumbed to this danger find themselves, all through life, instinctively deciding against a cause, an individual, even a nation, without ever having given them a fair trial; and that state of mind is clearly hostile to good neighborliness. What a splendid thing it would be if our young men could grow up believing that the really natural, human attitude is to seek the best, and to expect to find the best, in all that they encounter throughout life; to assume that other human beings are friendly and that their motives are sincere. Such an attitude is fundamental to good scouting; if our three and a half million scouts can maintain it, and can bring others to adopt it, then, I venture to prophesy the odds against catastrophe winning Mr. Wells' race would lengthen considerably. For, as another British author has written, 'the world is moved by ideas', and this idea of Baden-Powell's has in it the eternal spirit of boyhood, and some touch of magic which is helping to exorcise old ghosts and demons, and to draw the human family closer together in comradeship and service."

After the War the brotherhood of man will be nearer realization and the Boy Scouts will have played their part.
