Lt. H. E. Beardmore of Windsor, Ont., one of the assistant instructors at the winter training course for engineer and artillery officer and N. C. O. instructors at Petawawa Military Camp, shows how the courses have toughened him up. Here he is seen taking a snow bath first thing in the morning after bivouacking in the bush on one of the overnight schemes in sub-zero weather. The courses are designed to harden the instructors for future courses in their own centres. Judging by his facial expression he doesn't like his bath. (CANADIAN ARMY PHOTO)

OPPOSITION LEADER

The Premier had advised the Opposition members to keep some hens. But what about Falconwood farm? Dr. MacMillan read the criticisms of Messrs. Jones, Barbour and J. A. Campbell as supporters of the Campbell Government in 1938. Last year the expenditure at Falconwood was $145,000, the largest in its history.

He noted that Falconwood reports his not yet been tabled. He would like to hear an explanation about the man who was sent away to buy a bull for the farm, and came home with two cows. The cows cost $2300. What have been their records of milk production since? They sold Falconwood animals for less. Are they as good as those animals?

Premier Jones said the animals referred to were approved stock and were carrying valuable calves. The cows were purchased at a fair price at public auction and were worth the money.

Continuing, Dr. MacMillan reviewed Falconwood expenditures under both party governments. He recalled the Liberal campaign against the plans for a new institution.

Referring to his previous statement about the last election, he said his friend Dr. Yeo had come to see him and told him he had not personally issued instructions to prevent Conservatives from entering the Infirmary. He also said he had not entered the Infirmary himself or gone to the polls. Dr. MacMillan said he accepted these statements, but it was a fact that Dr. Yeo had gone out there at Mr. Prowse's request, and his complaint was that Conservative workers had been refused entrance by an official of the infirmary. He cited Dr. Murchison's letter, stating that he had issued no such instructions. There was no doubt that the patients were brought out and taken by Liberal drivers to the polls.

Falconwood

Resuming the debate in the evening session, Dr. MacMillan emphasized the recommendations of Dr. Murchison in connection with the needs of Falconwood Hospital. He assured the Government that any expenditures in that direction would meet with no criticism from him. He feared that the farm had become more important than the institution. Dr. Murchison's reports vindicated the stand the speaker took twelve years ago in rebuilding the hospital.

He recalled that in rebuilding the infirmary, he had been criticised for not building on the old foundations. The whole building was erected and equipped for $360,000. He also referred to obtaining the Carnegie grant for economics and sociology in 1931.

and St. Dunstan's College. In connection with the proposal to establish a technical school, Dr. MacMillan asked if there was any possibility of developing such a school at the Experimental Farm. The Dominion Government might be induced to build a school there and those experts used, instead of having to build at the expense of this Province. The teaching could be combined with work at Prince of Wales College.

It is difficult, he noted, to get any agreement on what the standards of education should be. He believed the education given at Prince of Wales College was sound and practical. For many years it has graduated students who are a credit to the province. He did not believe there ever was a pupil killed by hard work.

If another educational commission is appointed, he suggested, the farmers should be represented. He was surprised to hear Premier Jones say he had gone through Prince of Wales College and did not get chemistry. Dr. MacMillan was there in 1897-99, and chemistry was taught then.

Premier Jones: "I entered the second year."

Dr. MacMillan: "And a good teacher we had, Prof. L.H. Shaw." He agreed with the Premier that this Province has been treated unfairly in the matter of war work. Why was not Georgetown harbor made use of in the war? The smallest amount in our history was received last year on capital account. "I think the Premier is in a good position to go to Ottawa, because he doesn't want any job. There is no judgment in his case, no senatorship or anything."

Instead of appointing a salaried Minister of Reconstruction, Dr. MacMillan believed that all the extra work could be done in the department of Agriculture. Last year less than $50,000 was spent in this department, against a total provincial expenditure of about $2,500,000.

Dr. MacMillan strongly condemned the practice of "doping" horses before the races. He understood two horses had been killed in this manner last summer, and said it was something which should be investigated.
