If Women Did the Courting Dorothy Dix Says We Would Have Fewer Mistakes in Marriage

If Women, Instead of Men, Did the Proposing We Would Have Better and Happier Marriages, Because Any Pretty Face Will Deceive a Man, But a Woman Sees Through to Eternal Verities

A correspondent asks: "Do you think that there would be a better chance of marriages turning out successfully if women did the proposing instead of men?"

I do. The thing that makes marriage so often a failure is not any particular fault of the individual man or woman, but the blunder of the wrong man and woman, having gotten together.

I believe that a great proportion of these misadventures could be avoided if women were permitted by convention and custom to do the wooing and choose their mates instead of the courting being left entirely to men.

Also it gives the man too much of a chance to get away, and so in the end unless a woman is very audacious or very subtle or very lucky she has to take what she can get in matrimony instead of the thing she might prefer.

I believe that if women did the selecting in marriage they would make fewer mistakes than men make because women are better judges of men than men are of women.

So, through all the ages, the proper study of womankind has been man, and she has taken her M. A. degree in the course, but man has been under no such necessity of studying woman and he hasn't done it.

Especially is it almost impossible for a man to deceive a woman about the state of his affections, while any woman can make a man believe she is in love with him if she wants to.

But women do not marry for beauty. They put little stress on a man's looks beyond wanting him to be well-groomed and well-dressed, and manly looking.
