

What date is Your Birthday?

If it's soon, better warn dad right away that you want a bicycle more than anything else. Tell dad how popular C.C.M. bicycles are today with boys and girls. Tell him names of your friends riding bicycles. Ask him to go with you to see the model you want, or show him the picture of it in the C.C.M. catalogue. Get dad interested now, and we feel sure he will give you a C.C.M. on your birthday.

6 Big C.C.M. Features

There are many more points of superiority than these six big features, but, judged by these alone, the C.C.M. is the "King of Bicycles."

1. C.C.M. 20-year Nickel Plating.
2. C.C.M. Triplex Crank Hanger.
3. C.C.M. Improved Hercules Coaster Brake.
4. Three Coats of C.C.M. Enamel baked on over a Coat of Rust-Proof.
5. Gibson Pedals (on most models).
6. Dunlop Tires.

Your nearest C.C.M. dealer will give you the new 1930 catalogue or write to Canada Cycle and Motor Co., Limited, Weston (Ontario), Montreal, Winnipeg or Vancouver.

Now selling for dollars less than last year. In fact, the lowest in thirty years. Easy terms, too, if desired.

Married Quarters

By DAVID LYALL

Continued

"And at least you ought to have paid us the compliment of consulting us."

"What would have been the good, Lady Augusta? You would only have objected, and we should have gone on discussing it every dreary day without arriving anywhere. I never lived like that till I came to Cudham. I was a unit in a working world, not a talking one. I want to get back to it."

Lady Augusta looked very angry at this, and rapped with her ebony stick on the floor.

"And you will leave the children with us?"

"Of course, in the meantime. It is what you have always wished. It will save the expense of keeping up this house."

"That is a matter of no consequence, if only you had the grace to be happy in it."

Into Ruth's sad eyes flashed unfathomable pain.

"Please let me go quietly and pleasantly, granny. You are only interested in Gerry. He can do without me just now, and I can't bear it any longer. In France I shall feel nearer to his father. I've honestly tried, but I can't go on. I hope all this about Poppy will blow over, for I understand that you don't want another interloper in your family."

CHAPTER IX

Bradford spent the night on his return from Cudham in London at the Automobile Club, and the next morning presented himself at the War Office again. In order to make a better appearance and accentuate his claim he removed the sling from his arm and merely supported his wrist inside the breast of his tunic, a rather unconventional deportment which might or might not have arrested the attention of the Provost Marshal. However, in the short distance to be covered between Pall Mall and Whitehall he did not encounter that august individual. He was fortunate in calling early enough to find the major he had seen the previous day disengaged.

He looked surprised and slightly bored at sight of Bradford, remembering perfectly the substance of their conversation. Bradford was not a man easily forgotten by men, or by women either; there was something both winsome and virile about his personality.

"Look here, sir," he began impulsively. "I've been thinking over what we said yesterday. I'm really feeling most awfully fit, and I simply can't hang about home indefinitely. Couldn't you get a move on and give me a Base job for a month or so, in France preferably, or Egypt—anywhere out of England?"

The major fixed his eagle eye on the half-suspending arm.

"I had it in a sling yesterday. This is mere bluff, you know, and nothing can be done till you've been before a Medical Board."

"Medical Board be hanged!" said Bradford irritably. "They're too slow. There ought to be one set up in some handy place where a chap who wants to get back to active service would stand half a chance."

"You seemed pleased enough with what we decided yesterday," suggested the major, offering him a cigarette.

Bradford took the cigarette and admitted that things had changed in twenty-four hours.

"Something's gone wrong and rotten in my life, and I want to get out of England," he confessed.

"I'm sorry, but, you see, you're just out of hospital. We can't get beyond it."

"The last hospital I was in was really a convalescent home," said Bradford dryly. "You can't do anything, then, and I'll have to go back to Yorkshire and just wait?"

"That's it, Yorkshire, let me see, I've forgotten the name of the place, or did I hear it?"

"You took down all the particulars. It's Markyate-at-Stone, in the East Riding."

"I know a man up there at the Artillery School. It's one of the best we have. You can't be as dull as you might be convalescing in that bracing air, and you can always pop into the mess and potter about the camp; they'll be glad to see you. I know a round dozen or so of poor chaps who would be mighty glad of your privileges. You didn't ought to give this trouble, you know, Bradford."

Bradford made a grimace.

"I suppose not. Well, I'll go and wait with what patience I can. But you won't forget me, will you?"

"No, my boy, I won't. Sorry things have gone awry with you, but they'll straighten again. Most things do if only we wait long enough."

Bradford thanked him and withdrew—not, however, in a very hopeful mood.

Major Denison got out a notebook in which he kept private records and jotted down certain items regarding Bradford.

When the opportunity came he remembered them, and it was through his intervention that the Base job Bradford had asked for crystallized into one at his own home town. But this is anticipating.

As there was now no object in remaining in London, he took the noon train back to Yorkshire, which would bring him home at that happy
