No. 25 Four Sections TORONTO, CANADA, A. 1936

THE FRONT PAGE

THE accumulated assets of the life insurance policy-holders of Canada are the largest—by far the largest—single class of investment holdings in the country. They include every type of non-speculative investment, but owing to the nature of the insurance contract against property, with principal and interest payable in fixed dollar amounts, rather than ownership equities whose value and income depend upon earnings. The owners of these investments are only nominally the insurance companies themselves, some of which are wholly mutualized, and all of which administer total funds in which the shareholders' proportion is an almost infinitesimal part; the real owners are the policy-holders themselves. And in spite of the existence of a fair number of very large policies which may be regarded as a class of rich men's investments, typical policy holding is a matter of a few hundreds or thousands of dollars, the chief asset and the metaphorical anchor to windward of some industrial, commercial or professional worker who has not accumulated and never will accumulate any other important asset.

DON'T SPOIL YOUR SAVINGS

No act of destruction or partial destruction of the value of any such credit claim, be it a government bond, a municipal bond, a public utility bond, a railway bond, an industrial bond or an ordinary property mortgage, can ever fail to impair the assets of the life insurance policy-holders of the country. Any widespread destruction of such values must necessarily render the function for which those policy-holders rely upon them. The same is true of inadequate to perform the function for which those policy-holders rely upon them. The same is true of any tampering with the value of the unit of currency in which these credit claims are expressed. Policy-holders who have any real regard for the interests of their beneficiaries—the women and children for whose benefit the vast majority of life insurance policies are taken out—should set their faces immutably against all government tendencies leading to partial or complete repudiation of debt contracts, for such tendencies are destructive to the whole system of insurance.

The object of insurance is to make something sure. The effect of repudiation is to make everything unsure.

This editorial, taken from "Saturday Night", Toronto, is so timely and informative that it is reproduced here as one of a series of messages sponsored by Life Insurance Companies in Canada.

Mystery House

"Page dear, you mustn't take that reckless tone—it distresses me. You ought to thank God that He has kept you straight and pure in these days when so many unfortunate girls seem to have forgotten their honor completely."

"My being straight and pure isn't my own fault, Miss Gally," Page said, for the pure pleasure of being contrary. "I ran around quite a lot, a few years ago. But after awhile it just bored me. I wasn't amused—I wasn't amused! I took some awful chances, too..." She fell silent.

"Page, please don't say things like that! If I didn't know, Page, that you are at heart a good, sweet girl..."

"Of course I am," Page agreed cheerfully, as the other woman paused in distress. "What I'm trying to tell you is that it's no credit to me! Nobody ever made it hard for me." But immediately the girl's mood changed, and when she spoke it was in a brooding tone of restored resentment.

"I don't care. Life is damnably dull. You're only a few years, and it things don't go right then they never do. I thought I'd get this nurse job and be starting off on the Panama run on a big liner next week; I'd set my heart on it! I thought some of those New York editors would jump at my stories—they're a lot better than some they print—and send for me to come east! Nothing happens. Nothing ever happens except carrot salad and looking up last April's correspondence on the subject—and fog!"

"Mrs. Hurley to see you, Miss Hazeltine," Olga said in the doorway.

Page looked at Sarah. "I don't know any Mrs. Hurley except the employment office woman," she said uncertainly.

"Maybe they've changed their minds about the position on the ship, Page."

"Oh, my goodness, maybe they have!" Page had been somewhat reluctantly straightening her hair and powdering her nose; now she accelerated her movements with a sudden spring. She pressed a lipstick to the fine wide mouth that gave character to her brown young face.

"Oh, Miss Gally, pray!" she said, following the maid from the room.

Mrs. Hurley, gaunt, dowdy, disillusioned as only the manager of an employment agency can be, was waiting in the little den behind the big parlors.

"Is it about the nursing job on the ship?" Page demanded eagerly.

Mrs. Hurley looked at her thoughtfully. "You felt real bad about that, didn't you?" she asked.

"I did!" Page answered promptly. "I think it's ridiculous for them to say they want a nurse, and then when one applies..." She ceased her heart forcefully, eloquently.

"Look, dear," Mrs. Hurley interrupted suddenly. "You're a graduate nurse, aren't you? But you're not nursing now?"

"I had a chance at an office job, and it seemed better than just chance engagements nursing."

"The thing is," Mrs. Hurley began, and paused, uncertain. "There isn't anyone could hear us, is there?" she asked.

"The thing is," older woman said, speaking somewhat doubtfully. "I heard of another job. I'd—I don't know whether you'd want to take it. But it'd pay you well."

A pause. Page, young and flushed and curious, looked at her caller expectantly. "How'd you mean?"

"Well, I guess you've heard of old Mrs. Prenderast and Mystery House," Mrs. Hurley began. "It's her."
