How To Keep A Husband Happy Dorothy Dix Erects Signposts Along Path Of Matrimony Being a Good Wife and One Who Gives Satisfaction and Keeps Her Husband Blessing the Day He Married Her is the Riskiest Job on Earth, But the Secret of Turning the Trick is Moderation

"My dear," said a wise woman to her daughter who was going to be married, "you want to be a good wife and to do your duty in that station in life to which you have been pleased to call yourself. Now being a good wife and one who gives satisfaction and keeps her husband blessing the day he married her is the most chancy job on earth, but the secret of turning the trick is moderation.

"The reason that so many women fall as wives is because they overdo it, one way or the other. They are too too-too, if you get just what I mean. They never strike the happy medium and so they turn their virtues into vices, or else they are all vices and no virtues, and they either starve their husbands to death for a little kindness or else they suffert them on sweetness.

"So here are a few signposts that I want to erect along the pathway of matrimony that will enable you to keep to the middle of the road, which is safe and easy-going, and will prevent you from falling into the ditch on either side.

"Don't love your husband too much. Or, at any rate, don't let him find it out if you do. Don't let him get the idea that you will go on worshipping him, no matter how he neglects you or treats you. Make him feel that he has to be on his tiptoes all the time to hold your affections. No man values the thing that he doesn't have to take care of and that he knows that he couldn't lose if he tried.

"Don't be stingy about burning incense before him, but, on the other hand, demand a few punk sticks for yourself, and be careful never to climb down off the pedestal on which he placed you before marriage. If a woman shows that she expects the same attentions after marriage that she did before marriage, she gets them. The French say that in love one kisses and the other permits himself or herself to be kissed. See to it that you are the kisser instead of the kisser.

"Don't overdo the wife business. Don't always be asserting your ownership, and, for Heaven's sake, have too good taste to parade your authority in public. How a wife manages her husband is her own secret affair that she should never reveal to any one. Never mention the word duty in connection with marriage to your husband. Keep him feeling that it is a privilege and not an obligation to be married to you.

"But don't ask too little of your husband, either. A woman can on, for he will kick you around if you do after the manner in which we all treat doormats. Don't let him enslave you, for he will have no respect for you if you do. Don't be one of the women who are ALL wife, because, if you are, your husband will get fed up on you and turn from you to some woman who is a Lady Love, and whom he has to try to please and who is a more peppy companion than one who will put up with anything he does and think it all right.

"Don't ask too much of your husband. Don't expect him to give up all of his old friends and acquaintances and amusements for you and to have no interest outside of you. Don't expect him always to want to do the things that you want to do. Don't demand better clothes and houses and cars than he can afford to give you.

"But don't ask too little of your husband, either. A woman can sacrifice herself to her husband until he comes to the place where he takes it for granted that she enjoys being a martyr and has no natural human desires. A woman can stay at home until her husband never thinks of taking her out and giving her a good time. She can go shabby until he thinks that she doesn't care for good clothes. Don't make this mistake. Be reasonable, but see that you get your share of the profits and perquisites of your domestic partnership.

"Be a Pal. Be your husband's best girl friend. Enter into all of his interests and amusements. Encourage him to talk about his business and his hopes and plans and ambitions. For every man has to have some woman confidante to whom he can tell the things that he would be ashamed to tell any other man.

"But don't tag him. Don't be one of those wives whose husbands can never shake them. Don't make your husband drag you along when he goes off on fishing or hunting trips. Don't be one of those lachrymose wives who weep and who feel themselves ill used if their husbands stay downtown now and then for an evening with the boys. And don't begrudge him his men friends. Think how bored you would be if you didn't have women to talk about women things.

"Be thrifty. Save your husband's money and help him get a start in the world, for opportunity knocks only on the doors of the young men who have a little something laid up in the bank.

"But don't pinch the pennies so hard that you grow old and ugly before your time by working too hard to save the price of a servant. Don't be so saving that you cut out the beauty shop and pretty clothes altogether and go about looking like a frump, for, if you do, by the time you get on Easy Street your husband will pass you up for a doll who looks like a daily hint from Paris. And don't always be reminding your husband of the price of every pleasure, because if you do, your husband will soon cease to take you out. Just remember that a saving wife doesn't always save herself.

"And, finally, my dear, be amiable and pleasant and agreeable and easy to live with, but don't be a Pollyanna who keeps on smiling sweetly at a grouch and a tightwad and a philanderer and a wife-batter. Demand decent treatment and let your husband know that you will quit if you don't get it.

"Remember that every wife writes her own price-tag, and the higher she puts it, the more her husband values it." DOROTHY DIX.

METHUSELAH

Methuselah ate what he found on his plate, And never, as people do now, Did he nibble the affluunt of the caloric count, He wasn't disturbed, as at dinner he sat, Devouring a roast or a pie, To think it was lacking in lime or in fat, Or a couple of vitamins shy. He cheerfully chewed every species of food, Untroubled by worries or fears, Lest his health might be hurt by some fancy dessert, And he lived over nine hundred years. —ANONYMOUS.

Germany Wants Debts Cancelled

BERLIN, May 14—(A. P.)—To the accompaniment of heckling from the National Socialists and the Communists, Chancellor Heinrich Brüning defended his foreign and domestic policies before the Reichstag today in a long speech in the course of which he reiterated the German demand for complete cancellation of political debts. There has been no change in the German position that it is impossible to continue reparation payments, the Chancellor said, since that policy was first announced to the world last January. There is increasing evidence that other powers are coming to realize the justice of the German view, Dr. Brüning averred. Without complete cancellation of political debts, there can be no economic recovery for the world, the Chancellor told the Reichstag, and postponement of payment, or even final payment in one lump sum, is not acceptable. "It is easy to understand," he continued, "why the people are beginning to lose enthusiasm because of the deliberation with which the Disarmament Conference at Geneva is proceeding, yet there has been a certain noticeable improvement since February.
