THE BAPTIST CHURCH

The morning worship service at the Charlottetown Baptist Church Sunday was under the direction of the Canadian Girls in Training, and conducted by their leader, Mrs. L.J. Levy with assistance of vice-president, Miss Madrien MacLean, with the lesson of the morning read by Miss Shirley Campbell.

Dr. Zella Clark, for many years a medical missionary in India presented the very interesting address "The Strange Women I Have Known in India."

"The thought before us brings a great challenge, it is ours to think of what we can do, of what we can be in the great task of leading the women of India to Christ the Saviour, training them for leadership in this task," the speaker said. "Three words of challenge are 'Go-Pray-Give!' A vivid picture of some women of India who had been so enlisted, so trained, so working was set forth by Dr. Clark in a very interesting address."

Included in the music of the morning was the chorale "We Would Be Building." The Church School met for Bible study period at the close of morning worship.

The service of evening worship was conducted by the Rev. J. Judson Levy B.D., who preached the sermon.

The anthem of the evening was "Prelude of Gailles" by Miss Pearl Burns as soloist. The music of the day was in charge of Mrs. G. Elliott Paul, organist and director of choir.

Is This Russia's Foreign Policy?

By WES GALLAGHER

FRANKFURT, Germany, Mar. 10 (AP)—Some United States representatives on four-power Allied committees in Berlin, after months and in some cases years of study, feel they know the answer to the world's No. 1 diplomatic mystery—what is Soviet Union-foreign policy, where is it going and how does it propose to get there?

Various diplomats, army officers and civil servants who have made friends of Russians think they have discovered part of what makes the great eastern state tick.

Eliminating minor differences, here is the core of what a majority of these men feel, as gained from informal talks and interviews over a period of weeks:

There are three schools of thought in Russia on foreign relations.

1—That the Communist system is in a constant state of "war" with the capitalist system and all efforts should be made to further the Communist side of this conflict as rapidly as possible. This school is said to include Foreign Commissar V. M. Molotov and Andrei Vishinsky, vice Foreign Commissar.

2—That Russia can live in political peace in a world that includes capitalist states and co-operate on international problems fully without conflict. This school is said to include Maxim Litvinov, former foreign commissar and former ambassador to the United States.

3—The "wait and see" school which holds that Russia should devote the next 10 to 15 years to building internally while co-operating, and to drive the best international bargain in the meantime without giving up any fundamental aims.

Generalissimo Stalin is said to belong to this school.

As used by the first school the word "war" is not meant in the sense of physical conflict but in the sense that Communist policy must be aggressively pushed constantly throughout the world by political, economic and diplomatic means.

American negotiators who have been dealing with the Russians do not feel that war between Russia and the United States is inevitable. They feel that the interests of the two nations need never come in conflict and that differences can be settled by negotiation for the foreseeable future.

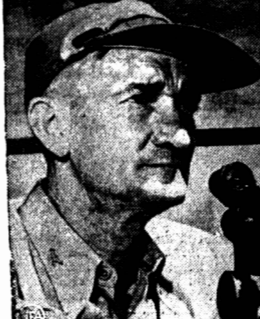

They state that Soviet foreign policy is not made by the Soviet Foreign Office but by the Communist Party's politburo.

This body of about 14 top Communist leaders, they say, makes the policies which are executed by the foreign commissar and his aides.

Lack Understanding?

With the exception of Stalin, Molotov and Vishinsky, the members of this policy-making committee never have been outside Russia and have no fundamental understanding of the problems of other nations. They have become suddenly conscious of their own strength through a victorious war after years in the status of an untried nation.

Tough-talking Vishinsky carried this feeling on the floor of the United Nations at the recent session. He has expressed the view privately, according to American sources, that capitalist United States and Britain have hit their peak and are on the down grade while Communist Russia is just in the growing stage. His attitude is that nothing can stop Russia and the Communist system

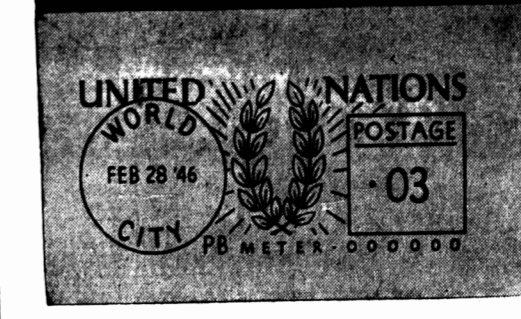

Rear Admiral John H. Casady commands the special Navy task force engaged in 'Operation Blizard' in sub-Arctic areas of the North Atlantic.

His force, consisting of the new aircraft carrier Midway, three destroyers and a tanker, is seeking out the most foul weather possible to test out carrier operations, planes and equipment under adverse cold weather conditions. Admiral Casady is one of the famous wartime skipper of the carrier Saratoga.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., March 10 (AP)—The Bell Aircraft Corporation said Saturday that the firm had been issued what was termed "the first commercial helicopter licence ever granted" for its new model 47, two-place helicopter.

From being the dominant power in the world, the Bell Aircraft Corporation said Saturday that the firm had been issued what was termed "the first commercial helicopter licence ever granted" for its new model 47, two-place helicopter.

American observers feel that Russia will continue this aggressive international diplomacy, pushing forward in all fields until halted by her own limitations or the united opposition of other nations.

Above is the first design submitted for any form of United Nations postage. Technically known as an indicia, it is intended for pre-stamped, metered mail.

FREDERICTON, March 10 (CP)—000, according to a report released by Hon. John B. McNair, Premier and Minister of Lands and Mines, New Brunswick down to the comparatively low total of about 434-1 in the province last year.
