DISCUSSION ON F. C. A. ACT IN SENATE

Hon. John E. Sinclair: Individual cases have been referred to, both this year and last, in the discussion of the act. I do not think that we can get very far by basing our opinions on certain cases. I could read affidavits that I have under my hand to show that many of the statements made in this Chamber have not been based on the facts put on record by applicants before the board of review. I think it is unfair to make those references. I do not think we shall improve the situation by going into them. I did ask some honourable members before the committee to give us their authority for the statements they were making, but they declined. The statements were not threshed out there, and I think very little benefit would accrue from bringing them up here. In a statement made before the committee the Director of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act was accused of making a false return; and I think that statement will be repeated by the honourable member from King's (Hon. Mr. Hughes) this afternoon. Now I want to say to the House, in my address to the Department of Finance and the officers of that department, that the return which was made stated clearly that certain cases mentioned were simply examples, and that there were many others of the same kind in the province of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. Hughes: What senator is the honourable member referring to? There happen to be two of us.

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: Does the honourable member refer to the statement which was said in the House or in the committee?

Hon. Mr. Hughes: I am referring to what you are saying.

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: I may say to the honourable gentleman that two senators made the statement, one in the committee and the other in the House.

Hon. Mr. Hughes: What statement was it?

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: I think it is unfair to go into individual cases, but I want to say that the statement of the Director was a correct statement, if the honourable gentlemen who have been branding it as incorrect had desired when the committee was sitting, they could see the information from the Director. In declaring in the House afterwards that the statements were false, without having taken the opportunity of seeing the information, the honourable gentlemen were going entirely too far. From the information I have had, both in Prince Edward Island and here, I am quite justified in saying that the statement of the Director of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is fair and true statement, and representative of the cases he mentioned.

Hon. Mr. Hughes: Does the honourable gentleman refer to the memorandum read by the honourable leader on this side of the House?

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: I am referring to the quotation made in the committee.

Hon. Mr. Hughes: Are you referring to the memorandum? I want to get down to particulars.

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: I have the statement here, if the honourable gentleman is anxious for it. I am glad indeed that he wants to get down to the papers. I have the exact statement here.

Hon. Mr. MacArthur: I will give it to you.

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: The statement read as follows:

"Many cases of hardship have been referred in this connection. The following are two sample cases."

"Then the cases were mentioned. That is the statement I refer to. If I understand aright, it is in connection with the sample cases mentioned that the veracity of the Director was questioned. If it is not correct, I shall be glad to be contradicted."

Hon. Mr. Hughes: Do you endorse that statement?

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: Do I endorse the statement made in regard to the two cases?

Hon. Mr. Hughes: The statement referring to Prince Edward Island which was prepared by the Director in Ottawa and read by the honourable member in the House.

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: I do endorse it, and I know it is correct. If the honourable gentleman wishes to know what cases were referred to, I can tell him. He knows the people. They live in his own locality. The name of one applicant is Mrs. Bridges Courts, of Cardigan. Head, and the other is Walter Sullivan, of Greenfield.

Hon. Mr. Hughes: Are they merchants or farmers?

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: They are applicants under the Act, and if my honourable friend wants to know who the trader is that—

Hon. Mr. MacArthur: Gave half price?

Hon. Mr. Sinclair: —that got the mortgage, it was Mitchell J. Power. My honourable friend knows him quite well; and if he had wished to get that information before the committee prior to accusing the Director of falsehood, he had an opportunity to do so. I can go further than that if my honourable friend is still anxious for accuracy.

Hon. Mr. Hughes: I know Michael. I do not know the others at all.

Second Chance

TAKE 2 STORY—"I did hear that," William Trevor said. "Just fancy! A gal-bird! And in Trevor's tool Hallett he said his real name was,"

Poison subtle and deadly. Half-a-dozen seeds dropped almost at random and no one could hazard what the crop would be.

"Heard a queer yarn from a chap I met in the Three Pigeons," someone would say that evening where two or three were gathered together. "About that chap Ferguson in the Sales Department. He always seemed a queer sort of bird to me."

And so on. With many "Would you believe it's," and just as many "Better not say anything about it's," the news spread in a widening circle, and, naturally, did not cease in the telling.

But on Sunday Ferguson was mercifully unconscious of the subterranean influences at work. He walked through the wood to the Mill and beyond the church at the end of the valley to the main road. Half a mile along this was a field path which led to a small village and thence, completing a wide detour, he could return to Mossford.

It was a lovely walk, and he reached Number Five pleasantly tired.

Lucia Gaddesden went to the chapel of her choice in the evening and Ferguson was alone in the silent house. He had an excellent book to read, but he had not time to read it. He failed to hold him. His thoughts wandered, although it was a good book.

Had she been serious as she talked to him in that room? He doubted it, knowing her. She wasn't consciously lying, but she was one of those people who can adopt a pose, give it every semblance of reality. She probably believed in it herself for the time being—but it remained a pose.

In any case she belonged to the past—to the past that was dead. He looked around the little room. There were a hundred personal things which made it his own—his home. Again he had the feeling that it was an anchorage.

Outside, the sea was rough, perhaps dangerously rough. There were the books he was gradually gathering up. He had a tobacco jar which Mrs. Gaddesden had given to him. A humble place, but he was grateful that it was a home.

A smile touched his lips for a moment as he remembered the tumultuous ambitions of other days. All he asked of life now was to be allowed to live in peace.

That of course, is what the great majority of humanity really want, whatever their religion—peace.

"Air-Raid Wardens" For Great Britain

(C.P. Havas, By Guardian's Special Wire)

LONDON, June 19.—"Memorandum no. 2"—a detailed outline of measures to be taken to warn the civilian population of approaching air raiders in case of war—was made public tonight by the anti-aircraft precautions department of the Home Office.

"Air-raid wardens" established in industrial urban and suburban sectors will be advised by the anti-aircraft precautions bureau of any enemy planes headed toward their particular region. For this purpose, Great Britain is divided into 100 sectors, corresponding in large part to the regions covered by urban or provincial telephone exchanges. In order to simplify the warnings and rush them over telephones without loss of time, each message will be symbolized by a color. For example, the word "yellow" spoken by a phone operator to an air raid warden will signify a preliminary warning. "White" will cancel the warning. Should the operator call "red" the air raid warden will know it is time to alarm the entire population of his district; an immediate "Green" will mean the danger is over.
