Rev. Ewan MacDonald Buried At Cavendish

Funeral services were held Sunday at Cavendish for Rev. Ewan MacDonald, a native of the Province and husband of the late Lucy Maude Montgomery, author of the famous "Anne" books. The services were from Green Gables, the old farm home which figured prominently in the Anne stories.

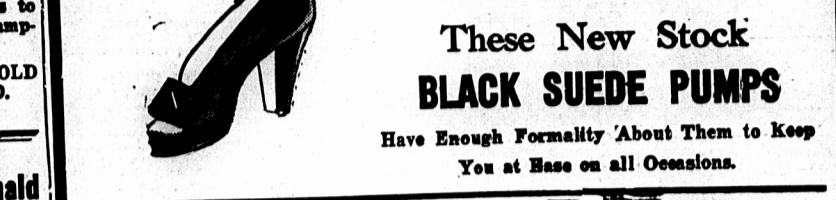

The pallbearers were: Alexander MacNeill, Ernest MacNeill, Leslie MacNeill, Fred Clark, Earl Stimpson and George MacCoubrey. Mr. MacDonald was a native of Valleyfield, P. E. I. and it was widely known that he was a member of a Presbyterian Church at Cavendish that he met his wife.

The first combination variety concert and pie social to be held in Kensington for many years was held in the King George Hall Friday evening, Dec. 10, and from both an artistic and a financial viewpoint, was an unqualified success.

Mr. James Pendergast filled the position of chairman efficiently, outlining the purpose of the entertainment, and stressing the value of a skating rink to keep up the morale on the home front. The program was given an auspicious send-off with the rendition of a pleasing solo by Kensington's youngest singing star, Miss Peggy McQuaid. "White Christmas" and "Santa Claus is Coming to Town" were received with vociferous applause and cries for more. James Saunders, Jr., another of the town's promising youngsters in the realm of entertainment, was next on the program, singing "You'll Never Know" and "Wait For Me, Mary." These were also received with thunderous acclaim. Mrs. Reginald Sudbury and Mr. Norman Macdonald, contributed two duets, "What's The Use of Going Home" and "There's Nobody There to Love" and "Peggy O'Neill." Mr. Macdonald filling in on the chorus with a fast water. Both numbers were heartily applauded.
