Despite the city's war damage, estimated unofficially at $500,000, the capital continued to function. The French Ambassador in Rome, Andre Francois Poincet, who has been virtually ignored since his assignment there last October.

Double rations of bread and the slight of food trucks dimmed memories of hunger and stress. The traditional capital already had begun to think about rebuilding. The National Reconstruction Service plastered walls with placards urging Madrilenos to dedicate all efforts to this task.

First, however, was the welcome to Franco. The city did not know when he would arrive, but he was expected before the end of the week.

address, the convention heard Federal Agriculture Minister J. G. Gardiner forecast steps by the Dominion Government to bring about better conditions in the dairy industry. The Minister expressed hope that, "by legislation or otherwise, the administration would be able shortly to make possible a closer association between the organized processors in Canada in relation to the dairy industry."

He could not disclose details for a few days, he said, telling the minister's hands are tied before his legislation is brought down.

The minister urged upon the more than 100 delegates from the five eastern provinces that they proceed with a greater degree of cooperative organization among themselves to better farm conditions, rather than depend too completely on government aid.

Producers could do what they were properly organized," he asserted. Many who called on governments to help them emulate the success of agricultural producers in Denmark and Sweden, forgot that what these countries had accomplished was through cooperation among the producers rather than by government aid.

"And if we can't see the reason, he added, why we can't so organize ourselves as to take care of the problems which we ask governments to look after."

service. The plan for increasing the Territorial Army calls for increasing its present actual strength of 120,000 men to the wartime strength of 170,000 and then doubling it.

Total Army's Strength —War Office informants said this would bring the total of Britain's forces under arms to about 793,000 men.

This includes the regular army of 204,287 men, fully trained and equipped with modern weapons which critics have asserted are lacking in many territorial divisions. In addition a War Office spokesman listed a reserve of 139,312, a supplementary reserve of 35,037 and anti-aircraft units totaling 74,929.

The expansion of the Territorial Army is to be effected by formation of a reserve battalion for each existing battalion.

The central council of Territorial Army Associations directed that the new setup be put into effect immediately. Instructions were telegraphed tonight to all units.

Mr. Chamberlain said the 1938-40 defence program, for which estimates already have exceeded the £500,000,000 mark.

Negotiations Proceed —He refused again to disclose results of intense diplomatic negotiations among Britain, France, Poland, Soviet Russia and others in the "half Hitler" program.

The spokesman listed a reserve of 139,312, a supplementary reserve of 35,037 and anti-aircraft units totaling 74,929.

This was indicated by the fact that more than 150 pro-Chamberlain members signed an amendment to the House of Commons resolution for a broader government and man-power. The amendment expressed "complete confidence" in Mr. Chamberlain and deprecated any attempt "to undermine confidence in the Prime Minister."

Many members predicted that the motion, which Anthony Eden, former Foreign Secretary, was a leading sponsor, would not even reach a vote.

The Queen heard Mr. Chamberlain's announcement from the Speakers gallery on one of her recent visits to the House. She had permanent hear debate on a bill for child rearing would be sent in wartime.

laboration all the powers which think as we do, all those who, like us, are ready to persevere in the paths of peace but which would rise together in a single rush in the face of aggression.

"I know that these words, which have defined the position of France, will find a fraternal echo in the friendly nations across Europe, beyond the channel and beyond the Atlantic."

In harmonious tones but with a hoarse voice, Daladier spoke into the microphone from his office in the War Ministry from 7:45 p.m. to 8:15 p.m. in ASST. room 812.

The address was broadcast in French over all stations in France and her North African possessions and was relayed through the world later in Italian, German, English, Spanish, Portuguese, Arabic.

While inviting Italy to submit her demands on France, he insisted his nation would yield no territory to satisfy Fascist ambitions and that France possesses the strength to defend her rights.

Reaction Awaited —Italy's official reaction was awaited for an indication of whether the address would mark a step toward reconciliation between Paris and Rome.

Daladier left it up to Italy to move next by making demands through the French Ambassador in Rome, Andre Francois Poincet, who has been virtually ignored since his assignment there last October.

contact should be made through diplomatic channels. He was expected to use her firm position as a lever to force withdrawal of Italian troops from Spain before meeting any Italian claims.

Strength Stressed —Daladier stressed French strength in the present "international crisis." He said this strength was, "finally, the friendship of France, those which concentrate our efforts and those which spontaneously associate her with free peoples and peoples who suffer."

The Foreign Minister followed up the Premier's address by publishing the text of the Italian note of Dec. 17 declaring the French-Italian pact of 1935 invalid.

Mussolini and King Victor Emmanuel of Italy expressed their protest against the Italian claims were set forth in the note, while the French have insisted it presented no specific demands.

Italian Note —The letter, addressed to the French Ambassador, Andre Francois Poincet, in Rome by the Italian Foreign Minister, Count Galazzo Ciano, declared the failure of the French Parliament to ratify the 1935 accord, lack of a special statute for Italians in Tunisia carrying out that part of the pact, and France's joining the League of Nations economic sanctions against Italy in the Ethiopian war as reasons for denouncing the treaty.

The note concluded: "Moreover, the constitution of the Italian Empire has created new rights and new interests of fundamental importance. In these conditions and in the very interests of their improvement, Italian-French relations could not still have for their base the present hour the accord of 1935, and precisely if it is wished to improve them, it is evident that these relations must be examined anew by the French and Italian Governments."

The French reply addressed to Foreign Minister Count Ciano by the French Ambassador on Dec. 25 also was published.

1. France had undertaken by the terms of the 1935 pact by exchanging over 2,500 shares of the Djibouti-Addis Ababa Railway Company to Italy despite the absence of formal ratification of the accord.

2. The French Government had undertaken to "facilitate the improvement of relations" between the two countries notably by recognizing the Italian conquest of Ethiopia and sending an ambassador to Rome after that recognition.

3. Italy knew of the "intergovernmental agreement" which rejected French imposition of League of Nations sanctions on the Fascist regime during the Ethiopian conquest.

The French note said the Government would "discuss the consequences" which the Italian note could have, but simply was recalling these facts in acknowledging reception of the Italian note.

House Ratifies Trade Agreement

OTTAWA, March 29—(CP)—Ratification of the Canada-United States Trade Agreement, signed last Nov. 17, was voted by the House of Commons today following weeks of debate. The bill to ratify the treaty was passed through second and third readings in a few minutes without a word of discussion.

A full-dress division demanded by Government supporters, showed 158 members in favor of the agreement and 32 against. The 32 dissenters were all Conservatives while Liberals, Social Crediters, and Communist Party members were all in favor of the treaty which affects the most sweeping downward revision of Canadian tariff structure undertaken in many years.

"I am asking a question," said Mr. MacKenzie.

"These strings of lies which my friend has quoted in his statement," continued Mr. Dunning.

"I merely asked a question," interrupted Mr. MacKenzie.

"I just rise to remark," said the Minister, "that I am wondering if it is not desirable that we take some rather strong measures with respect to such statements which cause otherwise the confidence of the Canadian people not only in their government but in the institution of government as such."

Mr. MacKenzie said the article alleged the department had decided only Bristol engines should be used in Royal Canadian Air Force airplanes. He had made no such decision. Each type of plane had to have an engine suitable to it.

It was alleged Canadian agency for the Bristol Company had been given to Frank Ross of Montreal in 1936 and that Ross had obtained a contract. The agency had been given to Ross 10 years ago and was actually held by a company with 33 shareholders.

No commissions were paid by the department and engine purchase prices obtained at the same price paid by the British Air Ministry excepting Canadian sales taxes and freight charges.

Except for one section, that limited profits on contracts awarded without tender to five per cent, the purchasing board bill was approved by the committee of the whole. It provides for creation of a board of four to handle all changes in the defence department.

Mr. Dunning told the House the Defence Department would be used as a "guinea pig" to try out the feasibility of amortizing capital expenditures. He provided for certain capital expenditures by the Department over a 10-year period.

Eventually, Mr. Dunning hoped, the principle would be applied to other expenditures for all departments as it was a step toward a plan by which the Government could pay its way instead of accumulating deficits on capital and ordinary public debt.

Hon. C. W. Cahan (Con. Montreal St. Lawrence-St. George) said the bill was designed to meet a political difficulty and objected to the expenditure of responsibility for its expenditures. He thought the Defence Department was not under competent administration and that he would not take away its responsibility.

Mr. MacKenzie said the bill was modelled on the system used during the Great War and would increase rather than decrease the control over expenditures as three ministers—defence, finance and national revenue—would share the responsibility.

The tendency of the bill, said Mr. MacKenzie, would be to force competitive bidding on defence contracts and to put a powerful weapon in the hands of the board to enable it to obtain fair prices on tenders. If the board's five tenders were too high or that there was collusion between contractors it could proceed to make a contract without tender subject to the five per cent profit is on the amount of capital employed in the performance of the contract and is made effective by the imposition of a tax equivalent to the amount of the five per cent net profit on each five per cent.

Mr. MacKenzie and T. O. Douglas (C.C.F. Weyburn) urged an amendment to bring contracts made on invited tenders under the same provisions as those made after advertised tenders unrestricted.

German-Polish Talks Begin Over Danzig

(By ROBERT B. PARKER, Jr. Associated Press Foreign Staff)

WARSAW, March 29—(AP)—Poland, reluctant to join Great Britain and France in a bloc against Germany, has started talks with Nazi Germany to settle the future status of the Free City of Danzig. It was learned tonight.

It was understood the conversations were intended by the Warsaw government to attempt satisfaction of Germany's desire for an end to the Polish corridor. The talks were to be conducted in a rooming house in Danzig. It was learned tonight.

Danzig, a city of more than 400,000 population, is largely German but has a Polish minority. Her independence in the Great War, an outlet to the sea the Baltic port was taken from Germany and made a Free City under the protection of the League of Nations.

A silence of former German territory, known as the Polish corridor, also was given to Poland so she could have access to the port which until recent years handled nearly all Poland's foreign sea-borne commerce.

Poland already is dominated by Danzig Nazis who succeeded in gaining political power there. Informal diplomats declared it "highly probable" that Poland and Germany are discussing the question.

Fire Prevention Statute Reviewed

HALIFAX, March 29—The best fire prevention legislation that can be prepared will be drafted by the Nova Scotia Government, Mines Minister L. D. Currie told the Provincial Legislature today.

Fire prevention statutes of every province are being reviewed by his department, he said.

In one of the busiest days of the session, discussion turned to the Queen Hotel disaster of March 2 during consideration of estimates for the factory inspector who is to be put under the act for prevention of accidents by fire in hotels. After the investigation now being conducted into the disaster, there would be "such a follow-up that there will be no cause for complaint," the minister said.

Edouard Daladier — Europe's Newest Dictator, But France Doesn't Care if It Makes Her Strong

BY MILTON BRONNER, N.R.A. Service Staff Correspondent

PARIS, March 29—If stocky, pug-nosed Edouard Daladier appears to have become, at least temporarily, a dictator in the growing European crisis, it is because he holds no illusions about Adolf Hitler.

Edouard Daladier, who has three times been premier of his country in recent stormy years, holds no illusions because he is a keen student of history and because he has been a soldier, both as a private in the trenches and as a general.

Above all, Daladier believes in constitutional government, but he believes at the same time that he will have peace one must be strong. That philosophy more than anything else explains his demand for emergency powers that have put French workers on a 64-hour week, that have geared the nation to a war-time basis generally.

20 YEARS IN POLITICS

As minister of war, the one-time Provincial baker boy began to strengthen national defense as early as 10 years ago. More than any other man he has been responsible for bringing the French army to its present high point of efficiency. With Andre Maginot, he has been called the greatest war minister since the Armistice.

Daladier's political career started on Armistice day, 1919, when he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies. Herriot gave him his first portfolio five years later, naming him minister of colonies. From that point he rose swiftly.

He has been minister of colonies, of public instruction, of public works and of war. More than any other man he has been responsible for bringing the French army to its present high point of efficiency. With Andre Maginot, he has been called the greatest war minister since the Armistice.

Daladier's political career started on Armistice day, 1919, when he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies. Herriot gave him his first portfolio five years later, naming him minister of colonies. From that point he rose swiftly.

He has been minister of colonies, of public instruction, of public works and of war. More than any other man he has been responsible for bringing the French army to its present high point of efficiency. With Andre Maginot, he has been called the greatest war minister since the Armistice.

But there has been no fantasy about Daladier for all that, about Edouard Daladier. He is a man of few words, so few that he has been called the "Coolidge of France." He makes only three speeches in one year as premier.

On the other hand, he is a man of direct action.

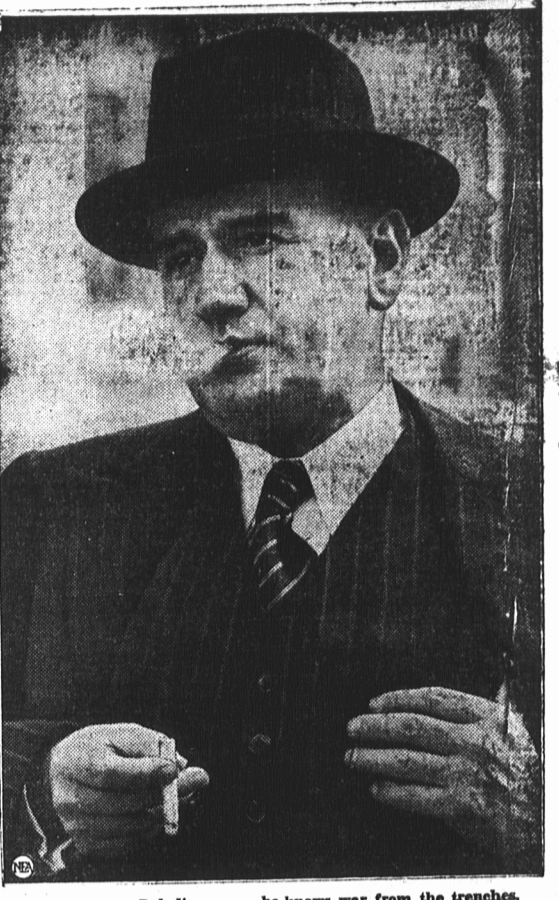

CITED IN WORLD WAR

He has been, in fact, since his boyhood in the sunny Romany country of southern France. He was born the son of a French baker, but his father had high ambitions for his son and so Edouard went to college. He won highest honors, although he worked himself through the university. He gave lessons at three francs an hour, getting up at five in the morning to prepare his notes. Thus from 17 to 25 he developed habits of inexhaustible endurance.

From French colleges he went to Rome for a year on a scholarship. Then he returned to France to specialize in history. And from history he plunged into the World War. He spent four years in the trenches, came out with the Legion of Honor, the Croix de Guerre and three citations for bravery. He has been fighting some form of battle ever since.

Daladier is known today as a Radical-Socialist. But those terms do not quite mean in France what they do in America. More accurately he is said to be Republican and a Democrat.

If France's action makes Edouard Daladier look like a dictator, Daladier doesn't care, so long as it makes France strong.

Edouard Daladier he knows war from the trenches.

On the other hand, he is a man of direct action.

Unification Held Only Solution To Railway Problem

OTTAWA, March 29—(CP)—The special railway committee of the House of Commons today recommended that the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railways be merged into a single system.

Morrow said he remembered one occasion when a chimney sweep cleaned his flue in the ladies' parlor. The flue had no connection with the main or kitchen chimneys, and he pulled it down to the cellar by a piece of rope.

Morrow said electric lights in the dining room
