DURING the past few years the engineering course of the University of New Brunswick has come more and more into prominence. This has been largely due to the overcrowding of some of the learned professions and the demand for civil and electrical engineers in recent years. To meet the demand for first class men the University of N. B. has always aimed at making this course the engineering course of the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland. To this end the management have been constantly adding to their equipment and improving their course thereby attracting considerable notice from the Upper Provinces and the United States. Many have ranked this university course with Toronto and McGill and it has been strongly endorsed by leading educationalists who have investigated its standing. The ad. appears in this issue of The Guardian and full particulars can be obtained by writing E. Brydson Jack, Dean of the Engineering Faculty, Fredericton, N. B.
