ST. ANNE DE BEAUPRE HOTEL IS PLANNED

QUEBEC, Oct. 13.—The world famous shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre is to have a new modern hotel erected nearby, if present plans go through, which will be known as the "Pilgrim's Rest, of St. Anne de Beaupre," and which will have a capacity of 500 rooms, with all modern conveniences, hospital facilities, restaurant, lunch room and garage.

It is estimated that the hotel, which is estimated to cost in the neighborhood of $500,000 will fill a long felt want on the part of the thousands of pilgrims and visitors who visit the Shrine every year from all points of Canada and the United States.

The chief dalal stood forward a moment as if in abstraction with downcast eyes, then with hands outstretched to catch a blessing he raised his voice and began to pray in a monotonous chant:

"In the name of Allah the Pitying the Pitiful Who created man from clots of blood! All that is in the Heavens and in the Earth praiseth Allah. Who is the Mighty, the Wise! His the kingdom of the Heavens and of the Earth. He maketh alive and killeth, and He hath power over all things. He is the first and the last, the seen and the unseen, and He knoweth all things."

"Amen," replied the crowd, as with a stir and rustle the close ranks relaxed from the tense attitude of prayer, and each man sought elbow-room.

The dalal beat his hands together, whereupon the curtains were drawn aside and the huddled slaves displayed—three hundred in all, occupying several pens.

In the front rank of the middle pen—the one containing Rosamund and Lionel stood a couple of stalwart young Nubians, sleek and muscular, who looked on with completest indifference, no whit appalled by the fate which had haled them thither. They caught the eye of the dalal, and although the usual course was for a buyer to indicate a slave he was prepared to purchase, yet to the end that good beginning should be promptly made, the dalal himself pointed out that stalwart pair to the corsairs who stood on guard. In compliance the two negroes were brought forth.

"Here is a noble twain," the dalal announced, "strong of muscle and long of limb, as all may see, whom it were a shameful thing to separate. Who needs such a pair for strong labor let him say what he will give."

He set out on a slow circuit of the well, the corsairs urging the two slaves to follow him that all buyers might see and inspect them.

In the foremost ranks of the crowd near the gate stood Ali, sent thither by Othmani to purchase a score of stout fellows required to make up the contingent of the galeasse of Sakr-el-Bahr.

"I need such tall fellows for the oars of Sakr-el-Bahr," said he with loud importance, thus drawing upon himself the eyes of the assembly, and sunning himself in the admiring looks bestowed upon one of the officers of Oliver-Reis, one of the rovers who were the pride of Islam and a sword-edge to the infidel.

"They were born to toil nobly at the oar, O Ali-Reis," replied the dalal in all solemnity. "What wilt thou give for them?"

"Two hundred philips for the twain."

The dalal paced solemnly on, the slaves following in his wake.

"Two hundred for a pair of the lustiest slaves that by the favor of Allah were ever brought into this market. Who will say fifty philips more?"

"Two hundred and twenty for the twain," said a Moor, and the dalal passed on with his wares, announcing the increased price he had been offered.

Thus he completed the circuit and came to stand once more before Ali.

"Two hundred and twenty is now the price, O Ali! By the Koran, they are worth three hundred at the least. Wilt say three hundred?

"Two hundred and thirty," was the answer.

Back to the Moor went the dalal.

"Two hundred and thirty I am now offered, O Hamlet. Thou wilt give another twenty?"

"Not another asper."

"They are thine, then, O Ali, for two hundred and thirty. Give thanks to Allah for so good a bargain."

The Nubians were surrendered to Ali's followers, whilst the dalal's two assistants advanced to settle accounts with the corsair.

"Wait, wait," said he, "is not the name of Sakr-el-Bahr good warranty?"

"The inviolable law is that the purchase money be paid ere a slave leaves the market, O valiant Ali."

"It shall be observed," was the impatient answer, "and I will so pay before they leave. But I want others yet, and we will make one account an it please thee. That fellow yonder now. I have orders to buy him for my captain." And he indicated Lionel, who stood at Rosamund's side, the very incarnation of woefulness and debility.

Contemptuous surprise flickered an instant in the eyes of the dalal. But this he made haste to dissemble.

"Bring forth that yellow-haired infidel," he commanded.

"Dost want him for the oar, Ali?" cried Ayoub-el-Samin across the quadrangle, a jest this this evoked a general laugh.

"What else?" quoth Ali. "He should be cheap at least."

"Cheap?" quoth the dalal in an affectation of surprise. "Nay, now. 'Tis a comely fellow and a young one. What wilt thou give, now? A hundred philips?"

"A hundred philips? cried Ali derisively. "A hundred philips for that skinful of bones! Ma'sh Allah! Five philips is my price, O dalial."

Again laughter crackled through the mob. But the dalal stiffened with an increasing dignity. Some of that laughter seemed to touch himself, and he was not a person to be made the butt of mirth.

"'Tis a jest, my master," said he, with a forgiving yet contemptuous wave. "Behold how sound he is."

He signed to one of the corsairs, and Lionel's doublet was slit from neck to girdle and wrenched away from his body, leaving him naked to the waist, and displaying better proportions than might have been expected. In a passion at that indignity Lionel writhed in the grip of his guards, until one of the corsairs struck him a light blow with a whip in earnest of what to expect if he continued to be troublesome.

"Consider him now," said the dalal, pointing to that white torso. "And behold how sound he is. See how excellent are his teeth."

He seized Lionel's head and forced the jaws apart.

"Aye," said Ali, "But consider me those lean shanks and that woman's arm."

"'Tis a fault the oar will mend," the dalal insisted.

"You filthy blackamoors!" burst from Lionel in a sob of rage.

"He is muttering curses in his infidel tongue," said Ali. "His temper is none too good, you see. I have said five philips. I'll say no more."

With a shrug the dalal began his circuit of the well, the corsairs thrusting Lionel after him. Here one rose to handle him, there another, but none seemed disposed to purchase.

"Five philips is the foolish price offered me for this fine young Frank," cried the dalal. "Will no True-Believer pay ten for such a slave? Wilt not thou, O Ayoub? Thou, Hamlet—ten philips?"

But one after another those to whom he was offered shook their heads. The haggardness of Lionel's face was too unprepossessing. They had seen slaves with that look before, and experience told them that no good was ever to be done with such fellows. Moreover, though shapely, his muscles were too slight, his flesh looked too soft and tender. Even at five philips he would be dear. So the disgusted dalal came back to Ali.

"He is thine, then, for five philips—Allah pardon thy avarice."

Ali grinned, and his men seized upon Lionel and bore him off into the background to join the two negroes previously purchased.

And then, before Ali could bid for another of the slaves he desired to acquire, a tall, elderly Jew, dressed in black doublet and hose like a Castilian gentleman, with a ruffle at his neck, a plumed bonnet on his gray locks, and a serviceable dagger hanging from his girdle of hammered gold, had claimed the attention of the dalal.

In the pen that held the captives of the lesser raids conducted by Biskaine sat an Andalusian girl of perhaps some twenty years, of a beauty entirely Spanish. Her face was of the warm pallor of ivory, her massed hair of an ebony black, her eyebrows were finely penciled, and her eyes of deepest and softest brown.

She had attracted the Jew's notice, and it is not impossible that there may have stirred in him a desire to avenge upon her some of the cruel wrongs, some of the rackings, burning, confiscations, and banishments suffered by the men of his race at the hands of the men of hers. He may have bethought him of invaded ghettos, of Jewish maidens ravished, and Jewish children butchered in the name of the God those Spanish Christians worshipped, for there was something almost of contemptuous fierceness in his dark eyes and in the hand he flung out to indicate her.

"Yonder is a Castilian wench for whom I will give fifty philips, O dalal," he announced.

The dalal made a sign whereupon the corsairs dragged her struggling forth.

"So much loveliness may not be bought for fifty philips, O Ibrahim," said he. "Yusuf here will pay sixty at least."

And he stood expectantly before a resplendent Moor.

The Moor, however, shook his head.

"Allah knows I have three wives who would destroy her loveliness within the hour, and so leave me the loser."

The dalal moved on, the girl following him, but contesting every step of the way with those who impelled her forward, and reviling them, too, in hot Castilian. She drove her nails into the arms of one and spat fiercely into the face of another of her corsair guards.

COULD NOT TURN OVER IN HER BED

Montreal Lady Was So Weak And Run Down—Is Now Well And Happy.

Mrs. Eugene Lepage, 3356 Henri Julien St., Montreal, Quebec, is another to offer her personal experience as proof of the wonderful health preserving powers of Tanlac. Mrs. Lepage recently said:

"Last spring I was down with my back and sides and so helpless that I had to be turned in bed. I dread, even now to think of that terrible backache. I also had headaches, my appetite was poor, my nerves all upset and my suffering so intense that I just couldn't help but cry at times.

"Tanlac brought me relief so quickly as to both surprise and delight me. After taking two botles I was able o do all my housework and care for my eight children besides, and five bottles left me feeling fine in every way. I still take Tanlac now and then for it gives me strength to meet all requirements. I give Tanlac to my children, too, and will always praise it."

MEET MANY ISLANDERS ON TRIP TO PACIFIC COAST

Mr. and Mrs. George Abbott of Union Road arrived home last Friday from a seven week tour of Western Canada and United States. They were accompanied on the trip by Mr. Abbott's brother, Mr. Walter C. Abbott, and Mrs. Abbott, of Somerville, Mass.

In an interview with a representative of the Guardian on Saturday morning, Mr and Mrs. Abbott stated that despite the beautiful and prosperous appearance of much of the Western country through which they had travelled, they concluded their trip feeling assured that they had seen nothing that looked so pleasant as their own Island.

Mr. Abbott declared that after an extensive tour of the much extolled State of California, he was convinced that, with the same boosting and advertizing for tourist trade, Prince Edward Island, which was a more ideal tourist resort than California in many respects, would in a very short time be accomodating its full capacity of summer visitors. He also stressed the fact that the farmer here had no more to complain of than his western brother, who is loudly lamenting deflated markets for all kinds of farm products.

On July 26th Mr. and Mrs. Abbott and their companions left by motor for Boston, Mass., where, as in most of the cities of size they visited they met many Island acquaintances; among these being Mr. Ewen McGregor, who fifty-two years ago was a member of the Charlottetown Police Force and who is still hale and hearty; Mr. J. Stanley Wedlock, and Mr. W. S. Newsom, both former Charlottetownians.

At Bedford, Mass., which was their next stop, the travellers were extertained by Mrs. Charles Hardy (formerly of New Bedford) and her sister Miss Rachel Hudson. Here Mr. and Mrs. Abbott had a pleasant reunion with their married daughter, Lillian, now a resident in Bedford.

By rail the tourists went north to Montreal. While here they visited various retail fur establishments where they learned that Island silver flack fox pelts were securing far higher prices than any others.

The next city visited was Winnipeg where the visitors renewed acquaintanceship with more Islanders abroad, including Mr. Richard Inch, who is engaged in market gardening on a large scale just outside the city. Mr. Inch is cultivating a thirty-four acre vegetable farm which in Mr. Abbott's opinion, cannot be equalled for fertility and freedom from weeds. In Winnipeg they also met Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert West, the former a son of Mr. Jonothan West of Charlottetown.

On their arrival in Regina the tourists were entertained and shown about the city and places of interest by Mr. and Mrs. William Sellar formerly of Charlottetown.

While in Saskatchewan Mr. and Mrs. Abbott visited Strasbourg, Buval and Saskatoon. In Strasbourg they met Messrs John and Charles Holman, formerly of Winsloe, and now extensive farmers in their adopted province: Mr. Lemuel Sellar, who is engaged in legal practice, Mr. Harry Irving, owner of a large wheat ranch; Messrs Edward and Ambrose Coles, formerly of Milton; and Mr. Brenton McMillan of Covehead. At Buval the tourists met Mr. Mervin Essory, who is the proprietor of a large general store in that town. At Saskatoon Mr. and Mrs. Abbott attended the wedding of their niece, Miss Doris McMillan, to Mr. Tiers, at which the other guests included Mr. Abbott's brother James Waldron, of Hershey Nebraska, who was here reunited with his two brothers for the first time in twenty-three years. In Saskatoon they also met Miss Agnes and Miss Alley, sister and aunt of Dr. Ayers.

In Edmonton, Alta. the travellers met old acquaintances in Mr. John McMillan, (formerly of Brackley Pt. Road); Mr. Augustus Mason; and Mr. Murdock McMillan, of West River. While on a short visit to Innisfail, which is some distance south of Edmonton, they met Mr. George West (a brother of Mr. Johathan West) who is in the wholesale grocery business and Mr. Blair McMillan, (of Covehead), an extensive shipper of beef and hogs.

At Calgary the visitors were cordially welcomed by Mr. Henry Jenkins, (son of Mr. Robt. Jenkins) the proprietor of a chain of ten grocetarias in that city. Here they also met Mr. Stanley Essory, his mother and two sisters; and Mr. and Mrs. Percy Bryenton.

At High River, Alberta they met Mr. and Mrs. Fulton Thompson on their large wheat and cattle ranch. During their stay here they visited and inspected, in company with Mrs Dicks (formerly Miss Mildred Farquharson), Mr. and Mrs. Harvey, Mrs. Alex McMillan and Messrs Chas Farquharson and Chas Blake, the Prince of Wales ranch which is situated some thirty-five miles from High River. Another outing that Mr. and Mrs. Abbott will long remember in connection with their visit here was a motor trip to Banff, the famous mountains resort which is noted for its healthful climate and salt baths. They also motored round Lake Louise, known all over the world for its scenic beauty.

The Abbotts found many Islanders residing in the High River district. Mr. Abbott said that in all their travels they saw nothing to touch this country for prosperity and fertility. He mentioned that on
