Baby's Eczema Cured by Zam-Buk

Mrs. Elgin Cossett, Joggin Bridge, N.S., says: "When my little daughter was five months old a rash broke out on her face and body. I called a doctor, who stated that it was eczema, and treated her for it. His treatment, however, did not bring any relief, and the child got worse. I then tried a great many salves and so-called eczema cures, but nothing proved of any benefit. The sores continued to spread, and became one large mass. One day a friend advised me to give Zam-Buk a trial. I did not have much faith in Zam-Buk working a cure, but as there could be no harm in trying it, I obtained a supply. At that time the disease had defied all remedies for over a year. By the time I had used one box of Zam-Buk there was a marked improvement. I continued the Zam-Buk treatment and day by day the sores showed signs of improvement. Finally Zam-Buk banished every trace of the disease." For the tender delicate skin of babies, nothing equals Zam-Buk. Unlike other ointments, it is purely herbal. Use Zam-Buk for cuts, burns, bruises, eczema, piles, and sore, chapped hands, and all skin diseases and injuries. At all druggists and stores 50c box. Name "Zam-Buk" is on every box, refuse substitutes. FREE TRIAL BOX. Send this article name of paper, and 1c stamp for return postage to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

mon which is to be successful must be very clearly thought out? "Yes; so clearly thought out that not a fragment of it will not be bathed in sunshine for the mind of the speaker himself. And besides that the matter with which it deals must not only be interpreted in itself, but must also be making a profound impression upon the speaker's mind while he is delivering it, as well as before. In other words, it must be himself invading his audience with the whole force of his personality. "You have given a good deal of time then to the study of the problems created by the present great war?"

"Well," he replied, "it was some time before these problems came forth with any clearness before my mind. The sudden and unexpected outburst of German fury amazed me; and the only thing I could do at first was to ask myself, 'What is this? Why people had for initiating such a bloody struggle and involving itself in a self-confessed international crime at the very beginning of it. Three things, in particular, made this question a difficult one for me. First, I had always sympathized with Germany's desire for colonial expansion. It had seemed to me that it was a most distinct hardship that while the British flag was floating over so many splendid colonies and our empire was steadily gaining others, a nation about fifty per cent. greater in numbers on its home soil, occupying a territory scarcely as big as our present province of Ontario, and blessed with a high birth-rate should be so poorly furnished with territory. I had believed in German culture as guaranteeing the same sort of justice and humanity as they do with ourselves, and had no serious doubt that to be under the German flag would be clear at that time. I had believed in other words I was ignorant of the facts of the case as were the leading statesmen of our empire who could not believe the Germans greatly worse than themselves. "So you have... come to believe quite otherwise," I suggested. "The Germans themselves, took care of that," he replied. "Ever since they set out to preach 'world-empire or downfall,' as Bernhardi graphically put the case for them, I have felt they seem to me to have done a little else besides furnishing indisputable proof that their boasted 'kultur' is of their intellects and their hands. The result of their ownership of important colonies would rather be a record of exploitation and oppression than a story of nurturing care flowing from that justice whose source is philanthropy. By means of that ever growing number of hearts of the humanitarian provisions of international law which I enumerated in my sermon, published in last week's Guardian, they have been telling the whole world that they must be looked upon with horror and loathing, and dealt with as men do with the cobra and boa-constrictor—not that quite either, but as they deal with vicious bronchos when they break and tame them into a trustworthy serviceableness. "You are using rather strong language now," I said. "How is it that your speech in the pulpit upon this same subject lacks fierceness?" Here is the reply I got to this question: "You remind me of a story I saw somewhere of an old Quaker whose broad-brim was snatched from his head by the wind and sent whirling and tumbling down the street at such a pace that pretty soon his fast-running feet were kept to ever keep within sight of it. Then, with his hair fluttering about his eyes he spied a profane urchin standing by, and handed him a quarter, exclaiming as angrily as a Quaker could—'curse me that thing the words of that! You bring to my mind also the case of the little girl who when she got home from her first service in church showed the strength of the impression which she had received by blushing out—'My but wasn't that awful! In mad, and didn't he swear awful! It may be true that some people are willing to pay for a good deal of a certain kind of cursing just now when they find themselves in church, but I am too much awed by a few cheerful ideals of mine to play the urchin for them. I try to state the truth clearly and strongly, and in such a manner as to convince the intellect and awaken the conscience. I have been told that after reading my sermon in The Guardian of the 18th inst., an aged mother in this province who had been talking against enlisting up till then, immediately declared that every one should go and help put down these awful Germans, and tried at once to persuade her married son-in-law that it was his duty to offer themselves. "Yet some people accuse you of being a pacifist," I said. "I am just as much and just as little a pacifist as Lloyd George is," he replied. "I believe with all my heart in the earliest possible establishment of an effective court of international arbitration and understand that our empire is really standing for that principle in the present conflict. It was the Austro-German refusal to let Serbia carry her appeal before such a court that precipitated the struggle. I believe also that my nation represents today the most largely Christianized of all the existing civilizations, and therefore that the defence of the heart of our empire means the defence of the Kingdom of God as far, though not so widely, as its development has proceeded. You have heard me say that from the pulpit more than once, and as to the use of sword by our people at the present time let me read to you these words from a letter of mine which appeared recently in the columns of the Christian Guardian of Toronto: "When the war broke out our Empire found itself with no weapon which it could hope to wield effectively in the interests of the truth and righteousness which had been threatened, but the sword with deep regret it unsheathed its blade, and it cannot now retire from the struggle with any prospect of better things than are to be realized through continuing in it. That is to say, each British citizen has been called upon to face a dilemma. He has reached a place where he must decide whether he will help the empire as it is, in connection with the best weapons it knows how to wield in the case and so accept his own full share of the chastening which God is now inflicting upon it under the conviction that he can serve the Empire in a superior way by affirming the Christliness of its future and denying in effect that its present can be considered at all as a portion of the reaction which that future is to be approached. Happily, while still looking for the new heaven and new earth wherein all righteousness and peace attainable by men shall find their home, we British citizens are able almost to a man to stand by our Empire and defend it for the sake of what it has already become through Christ, as well as for the sake of what it is yet to be as a result of His further work upon it. Then I asked, "What in brief did you mean when you claimed the other Sunday night that 'God is now causing us to eat of the fruit of our own doings, and filling us with our own devices—that he is chastening and correcting us?'" "I shall be pleased to do that," he said, "and all the more because of the fear which I have already expressed, that I did not make myself clear at that time. The two doings or devices which I pointed forward to were our century-long pursuit of strong drink and of war itself. Pointing to Russia I said that this correcting blow from God had the instant effect of opening her eyes to the disabling effects of the use of vodka. She found that she could neither mobilize her army nor supply it with the munitions of war because of this disabling. Then turning to Great Britain I reminded you of the existence of a similar serious condition of things boasted of its prowess in this direction, and all those who are engaged in this present most bloody conflict are boasting of that prowess now. The pursuit of war has resulted quite naturally in the German militarism of today, for this militarism in each of its frightful developments is merely what Tennyson called the blossoming of the red heart of war. The "chant of hate" and every other inhuman deed of this struggle, including the crucifixion of Canadians, if that has really taken place, flowed from the very centre of that red heart, and has fallen, as it were a blow from the hand of God, upon the quivering flesh of the nations, that they may open their eyes as never before upon the beauty of the love which redeems, blesses and uplifts. To quote again from my letter "By means of the increased horrors of militarism the

BRITISH SPIRITS AND IDEALS VS. GERMAN MILITARISM

(AN INTERVIEW WITH REV. J. L. DAWSON, M. A.)

The First Methodist Church of this city has had, as its minister for nearly a year now, a man who was not cast in quite the ordinary mould. He is a native of our province, like the late Dr. Dobson, of whom he has recently written, as they have noted his style of thought and his general mental outlook. He is a broader man than most, and would be a dismal failure as a parish politician, as his book entitled "A Race's Redemption" shows, for his mind demands that scope which is found only in the largeness of that Kingdom of God, which Jesus Christ is the Head. He has been accused of the vice of excessive modesty. Whether he has another I have not discovered, but to me this one has seemed serious, for in my opinion some of his deliverances from the pulpit on the differences which exist between the British spirit and ideals and those of the ruling classes of Germany have been far more illuminating than any which I have come across in my reading since the great war began, and he has scarcely ever consented to prepare anything of this kind for the press though he has often been invited to do so. His sermon of last Sunday night, as pronounced by at least one very intelligent critic as among the ablest ever delivered in this city. In an interview which I have had with Mr. Dawson, I find that his own estimate of this sermon (preached May 16th) was not high. Indeed, he regarded it as very largely a failure because its materials had not been thoroughly digested and its aim made perfectly clear for every hearer present. "So you think," I asked, "that a ser-

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned and endorsed 'Tender for Supplying Coal for the Dominion Buildings' will be received at this office until 4.00 P. MARCONI CALLED TO ITALY TO JOIN ARMY

NEW YORK, May 24.—William Marconi, inventor of the wireless telegraph, has sailed on the steamer St. Paul in response to a summons from the King of Italy, to serve his term of military service in the Italian army. Mr. Marconi, who is a member of the Italian Senate and an adviser of King Victor Emmanuel, is a reserve officer in the engineering corps. He said he expected to complete his term of service and return to America by next September, but would not venture a prophecy as to whether the war would end by that time.

How sleep the brave who sink to rest By all their country's wishes blest! When Spring, with dewy fingers cold, Returns to deck their hallow'd mould, She there shall dress a sweeter sod Than Francys' feet have ever trod. By fairy hands their knell is rung, By forms unseen their dirge is sung; There Honour comes, a pilgrim gray, To bless the turf that wraps their clay; And Freedom shall a while repair, To dwell a weeping hermit there.
