A CONTAGIOUS DISEASES HOSPITAL.

The fact that small-pox has lingered about various parts of Canada and that cases are now reported in Halifax, while diptheria has again show itself in Charlottetown, recalls the necessity for a contagious diseases hospital. Some day probably in the winter season when that disease is most prevalent, we may have an outbreak of small-pox in our midst, and unless preparation is made beforehand there will be no means of isolating the patients. We think the health authorities should consider these matters and have some place ready or easily made so to which patients afflicted with contagious diseases could be sent when the emergency arises.

It may perhaps be said that the wants of the community are many and cannot all be provided for at once. This is true, but one by one our most pressing needs are being supplied and others must be attended to. The most alert and careful quarantine cannot always be depended upon to shut out dangerous contagions. All last winter small-pox prevailed just across the Straits while there were a number of deaths from diphtheria in our midst. We would feel much safer and would be much better prepared for an emergency if we had a proper place for the isolation and treatment of those who may be suddenly afflicted with disease dangerous to others. And if the worst came to the worst, such timely preparation might and probably would be the means of saving some valuable lives.

A CASE OF INSUBORDINATION.

For some reason or other, no doubt a strictly military one, General O'Grady Haley forbade the men of the South African Contingent to appear in khaki uniforms to receive their medals. The same order had been made at Quebec and Montreal and it had been obeyed. But at Ottawa the men, who felt that the uniforms in which they had served King and country were good enough to wear in receiving their medals, proved insubordinate. No doubt popular feeling was with them, too in a large measure.

Be that as it may the Ottawa men decided after conferring together that they would ignore the order of the General and appear in khaki. The authorities got wind of it, and threats were made that if the men appeared in khaki they would not be admitted to the grounds. Still unterrified, and still insubordinate, the Contingent men went in uniform to the gate, prepared, it is said, to rush the guard sent against them if necessary. There was some delay, some parleying, the men went on, and when the Duke turned and saw them coming those who were near say an amused smile swept over his face. It is since given out that at the last moment Gen. Haley's order was conveniently recalled in order to prevent an unpleasant scene.

As the Montreal Herald puts it this occurrence, happening in Canada perhaps helped the Duke "to understand why the Canadians were successful in South Africa. Canadians are tremendously loyal to the Crown, but they are noticeably democratic at the same time. Where else in the Empire would such an act of insubordination be possible? Where else would the authorities allow it to be carried through? But the men who beat Cronje had to be excused if they did not tremble before General O'Grady, or even Major Maude."

THE CZAR'S VISIT.

It seems now to be conceded that the Czar's recent visit to France had no warlike object. Nor is the alliance with France, if actual alliance exists, by any means so important to Russia as to France. Russia is practically too strong, compact, powerful, and invulnerable to attack to need the aid of France under ordinary circumstances. France, on the contrary, with but one tenth of the population of Europe, finds herself hemmed in by the Triple Alliance, embracing three times as great a population as her own, and equipped with formidable armies and fleets. She is thus, if standing alone, under a constant measure of restraint.

It is hardly to be supposed that the Czar's visit was made merely for his pleasure, or for his health. He may have desired to see for himself the actual strength of the French armies and fleets, and this was something which was somewhat ostentatiously shown to him. Another object of the visit probably was to arouse French enthusiasm at an opportune moment for the floating of a Russian loan of $200,000,000 which is reported now to be forthcoming. Russia needs money for the completion of the Siberian Railway, and for the ships, and naval and military equipment she is constructing and preparing. And in the enthusiasm of the moment French capital will be ready for investment in Russian securities.

It seems to be in contemplation to make a change in the editorship of the Christian Guardian, the Ontario organ of the Methodist body. Hitherto most denominational journals have been conducted by ministers, but several correspondents are urging that it needs a trained journalist for the position. There is great force in this contention. One very prominent layman of the body puts it in this way:

I think that a layman of ability would get into closer touch with his community than the average ministerial editor could. The idea prevails, rightly or wrongly, that the Guardian "is a minister's paper." The rank and file of the Church think so. Perhaps they are wrong. But thinking so, their attitude toward the Guardian is not as sympathetic as it other wise might be.

The Best Medicine for Mothers

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

"Words cannot express how grateful I am for your kind advice and your 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes Mrs. D. B. Barricks, of Perrows, Campbell Co., Va. "I feel that it has cured me. I had been in poor health for four years. Suffered greatly with my right side, also with bearing down pains, and my nerves were in a dreadful state. After using four bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' I am now well. I am the mother of two children. With the first child I suffered twenty-eight hours, and with the second I used your medicine and was sick only three hours. I believe Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to be the best medicine in the world for suffering females. I wish you great success, and hope that God will bless you in your noble work."
