ENGLISH WOMAN

LONDON, Sept. 22. (By the Canadian Press)—Miss Winifred Wrench who is visiting in Canada continues to write her impressions for the magazine "Overseas," edited by her brother.

Watching a sunset at Metis Beach where she first felt she was really in Canada because of the country side, she writes: "No wonder our forebears thought they had found a new land of Canaan" . . . Of Canadian women she has this to say. "I have everywhere been impressed with the way they take hold of a job. They are so efficient and capable and seem to get through an immense amount of work.

"If someone were to ask me what I love most about Canada, I would answer: "I love the trees best, and of all the trees I love the birches most. But when I have said that, I immediately want to qualify it by all sorts of other things. I love the trees, but I also love the flowers, the acres of ox-eye daisies; the fields, knee deep in pink clover, that scent the air so deliciously; the sheets of purple iris and purple vetch, and all the other lovely flowers, familiar and unfamiliar, which go to make up part of the charm and delight of a Canadian summer, at any rate in the Province of Quebec. Yes, the flowers are lovely, but I return to the trees. I cannot think of Canada apart from her chief glory, her woods and her forests. There are trees everywhere, big trees and little trees, trees I have known and loved since my childhood days in Ireland; trees I have never seen before; and trees that are familiar and yet unfamiliar, seeing they are so much larger than the same species at home. There are impenetrable forests in Canada, a mile or two even from where I am writing at this moment, dense bush, enticing but rather awesome, so close and thick do the trees and undergrowth grow; but there are dark park like districts as well where the trees grow as if they had been planted by someone who knew just where each pine or birch or maple ought to stand.

"I find it almost impossible to pick out what I want to tell you most about Canada. Everywhere I have gone I have met friends, and been extended the warmest and kindest hospitality. I have met literally hundreds of people wherever I have stayed, and everyone has been anxious to do everything possible to make me happy and to help me in my task. Each place I have been to has its own special interest: Quebec, the oldest and quaintest town on the North American continent, the Edinburgh of Canada, with its small British Canadian population and its large

Science May Save World

LONDON, Sept. 23. (By the Canadian Press)—"Is it too much to hope that from this great gathering of science will go forth a new message of hope to this Empire and to a world distracted and laboring in unprecedented troubles?" asked General the Rt. Hon. Jan Christian Smuts, in a speech marking his installation as President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, in the Royal Albert Hall this afternoon.

Accepting the high post for the centenary meeting of the British Association, one of the greatest assemblages of scientists ever held, General Smuts added: "Science has come to represent the growing point of the human advance. It stands for the new forces which are reshaping this world of ours. It faces the world with a bold and confident spirit. It has an invincible faith in truth at all costs, and in that faith it is embarked on the endless adventure which carries the future of the human race.

"May its confident spirit and sublime faith bring new inspiration to the peoples and give them courage and strength for the grave tasks ahead," General Smuts declared.

"The Association has served its purpose admirably as an effective sounding board of the scientific advance," General Smuts said. "Here were fought out great controversies, like that over Darwin's theory of descent, and the dim of battle helped to give impetus to the new views. Here great discoveries were announced; here Joule explained his epoch-making researches into the mechanical equivalent of heat; here Rayleigh and Ramsay announced the discovery of argon which led to the discovery of the other inert elements; here Fitzgeraid first announced Hertz's verification of Clark Maxwell's theory of electromagnetic waves; here Sir Oliver Lodge gave the first public demonstration of wireless; most epoch making of all, here Sir Joseph Thomson announced his discovery of the electron. I could greatly extend this list of famous discoveries announced or proclaimed at meetings of the Association, but the foregoing will suffice as samples.

"Nor has the Association been content to cater for science in these islands only. From the 90's of last century onward, it has extended its mission to the Dominions, and it has repeatedly visited most of them. These Dominion visits have not been among the least fruitful and valuable meetings of the Association. Dominion workers have thereby been inspired and stimulated in a way which would not have been possible otherwise; lines of research in the Dominions have been suggested and started, which have led to fruitful results. British men of science, again, have come into contact with the wider problems presented by Dominion conditions, and have had to adjust their views to new and larger situations. The exchange of science, at these Dominion meetings has thus been mutually helpful, and apart from the purely scientific results, these meetings have served a useful purpose in stimulating the sense of fellow feeling and comradeship in the Empire as a whole. The response is seen in this great gathering, which in a sense represents a return visit of the Dominion Associations to the Mother Association, and a symposium of Empire science in the widest sense."

General Smuts expressed his deep appreciation on the high honor conferred upon him, adding that no personal merit was implied in his election, but that he stood there in a representative capacity. He recalled that 40 years ago to the day he sailed from South Africa to continue his studies at a British University. South Africa looked upon his election as an honor done to herself, he added, and the sister Dominions "appreciate this act of courtesy in which they all share." The British Empire had given yet another instance of that breadth of conception and human sympathy which made it the greatest and most beneficent political society that has ever existed, he said.

The new president, extended a cordial welcome to his fellow citizens from the Dominions and the outer marches of the Empire, and to the foreign scientists from Europe, Asia and America who had honored the meeting with their presence. Science knows no political boundaries, he pointed out. It recognizes no frontiers except those of reason and fact. And because of this he believed science was destined perhaps more than any other form of human activity to draw the nations together.

General Smuts recalled the British Association was born, in 1831, in a time of grave economic and political confusion and unsettlement. The prospects of British science no less than of British industry appeared sombre. He drew a parallel for today, saying "there is no room for doubt that science, now even more than in 1831, is the dominant factor in the industrial and economic situation, and that in the penetration of science into all avenues of human activity lies our main hope of future advance."

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 23—There have been no new features of interest on Canadian egg markets today, with prices and the general tone holding steady. Ex-Bad Boy Hilarious Comedy

Universal's long-heralded comedy "Ex-Bad Boy," opened at the Capitol Theatre yesterday, and fully lived up to all the complimentary reports which have preceded it. The picture is literally a comedy gem. Much has been said of the possibility of many screen comedies which have thus lost much of their force. But here is a story which altogether within the framework of possibilities, depending for its humor on its situations and acting rather than on more or less ridiculous comedy action.

Briefly, the story is this: The proprietor of a paint firm in a moderate-sized town sees his daughter falling in love with a young man whom he considers totally unworthy, and in an effort to break up the match induces his junior partner to pay court to the daughter. But the partner, a young man named Chester, is so bashful and so retiring that the girl utterly fails to become interested in him. However, the father arranges to have the news spread about that on a recent visit to Hollywood Chester has had passionate love affair with a famous motion picture star, and the daughter immediately changes her views regarding the young man.

And then the star, whom Chester has never seen, comes to town to make a personal appearance, accompanied by a very jealous sweet heart! Then, as the saying is, the fun begins.

The excellent cast of "Ex-Bad Boy" is headed by Robert Armstrong and Jean Arthur, and also includes George Brent, Lola Lane, Jack Robards and other screen favorites and has been directed in an effective manner by Vin Moore.

If you enjoy a good laugh, see "Ex-Bad Boy."

Muffs Once Used By Men

Colonial gentlemen must have possessed a very different complexion from their descendants of this period, for we read in an advertisement found in a newspaper about the year 1715 the following notice: "Any man that took up a Man Muff dropt on the Lord's Day between the old meeting house and the south meeting house are desired to bring it to the printer's office and shall be rewarded." Believe it or not that fact remains, muffs were worn habitually in those early days, not only by the fashionable beaux, but by sober minded men. It was a mark of dignity.

History relates that Horace Walpole was in the habit of carrying muff, and, more than that, he very often made gifts of them to his particular friends.

Returning to Favor

Pepsy, in his diary, records that he took his wife's last year muff for his own use and he also made gift to his mother of one of his wife's discarded muffs. All this seems to bring to light the absence of pockets, and who can blame the males of yesterday for using such comfortable contrivance as a coat muff to ward off the onslaughts of biting winds?

Although muffs have been discarded by women almost entirely for the past decade, they were discarded with other feminine trappings and trivialities, from all appearance the muff is again returning to favor and often serves a double use as being a purse as well as a hand warmer.

1,748 boxes. New Brunswick potatoes dropped 10 cents at 55 to 56 cents per 80 pound bag. Montreal potatoes were firm at 40 to 50 cents per 80 pound bag. Carlot prices of fresh Ontario or prairie eggs were unchanged, extras being quoted 30 cents firsts at 25 cents and seconds at 18 cents a dozen. British Columbia extras in carlots were steady at 32 to 33 cents a dozen. Quotations to retailers were unchanged and receipts totalled 1,243 cases.

Trade between the United States and China so far this year is greater than in the comparable period of 1930.
