Canadian Garden Service 1935

(Gordon Lindsay Smith)

MORE ABOUT ANNUAL FLOWERS

For quick results, an important point with the new garden or with property which is rented, annual flowers make a very satisfactory showing all by themselves. They are indispensable, too, in filling in the gaps in the perennial bed which may have suffered severely from winter damage. In almost every section of Canada there are literally hundreds of varieties from which to choose, including almost every conceivable color, shape and height. There are bushy plants like Dahlias, which will make excellent backgorunds to serve the purpose until the permanent shrubs assume full size. There are climbers such as the Scarlet Runner Bean, Nasturtiums, Sweet Peas and others which will cover fences, screen verandahs or even trail over walls and in the standard sorts heights range from the inch high tiny Alyssum to Sunflowers, Cosmos, and Zinnias which vary from a foot or so to six feet. Many of these can be planted as seed in the open ground from late April until the first of June. For short cuts or unusually early results many annuals may be purchased as well started plants and will bloom almost immediately or beginners can grow these things in shallow boxes in an open window or in a hot bed. In the more northern districts, tender annuals like the Petunia and Aster, which might not have sufficient time when sown as seed in the open to reach the flowering stage or if they did would only be in bloom a short time before early frost, this starting of the seed indoors is especially recommended.

CULTIVATION IS IMPORTANT

Even with the most fertile and open soil expert gardeners stress the importance of thorough cultivation. The preliminary jobs will usually be done with a spade or digging fork where space is limited but in the country where land is still valued by the acre a horse or tractor drawn plow will be used. At least once during the year and better still twice, the soil should be thoroughly turned over. Later on just before seeding it is usually best to rake or cultivate finely, in order to break down all the lumps. The benefit of frequent light cultivations is two-fold. It will destroy weed growth, thus conserving the fertility and moisture used by these unwanted plants and it will also conserve moisture from evaporation which is always more rapid in hard packed uncultivated soil.

VEGETABLE GARDEN

Where the area devoted to the garden is limited, careful attention must be given to such points as distance between rows and between plants, so that all space may be used to advantage, writes W. M. Fleming of the Dominion Experimental Farms. Each plant must have room to mature, yet gaps must be avoided. A study of rotation of crops and time of maturity is of great value in planning the small garden. Such crops as radish and spinach may be grown as intercrops between the rows of later maturing crops like carrots or parsnips. Late sown crops may be planted between the rows of early maturing crops just before the latter are ready to harvest. Two or three crops of such plants as radish and lettuce may be grown on the same area. A succession of quick growing crops by planting at intervals is also desirable.

Where land is cheap or where the garden may be laid out in any shape desired, ease of cultivation should be considered. All the rows may be placed the same distance apart, just wide enough for a cultivator, whether the vegetable required little room or not. The rows should be as long as possible for horse cultivation and several kinds of vegetables may be placed in the same row. Less time is wasted in turning, and also less ground in turning ends which are often weedy. A few minutes with a cultivator will keep a farm garden reasonably free from weeds during the rush season in the spring when there is no time for hand hoeing.

Two little boys were talking about the President of the United States. One of them said: "My father thinks he has done a lot of good."

The other boy replied: "Oh, I don't know—he hasn't closed the schools yet."
