When the outdoors calls

THESE are days when the links, the road, the woods and the stream call you to come and play. When you go, leave your expensive timepiece at home. Take Pocket Ben along with you. You will find him just as much a sportsman as you are—enjoying the strenuous hours—rendering accurate, dependable service under rough usage—cheerily ticking off the minutes throughout the longest, hardest day. Pocket Ben costs you but two dollars. Look for the trade mark Westclox on the dial and six-sided orange-bordered tag.

VASES 12,000 YEARS OLD

(By Dominion News Service) LONDON, July 21.—Ancient Egyptian pottery, the finding of which puts back the known period of civilization by 2,000 years, has just been placed on view at London University College.

The pottery is included in an exhibition of new discoveries by Sir Flinders Petrie and students of the British School of Archaeology in Egypt. An amazing feature of the pottery exhibits is that, although earliest in point of time, in beauty of workmanship they are the finest ever devised in ancient Egypt. Made of a black clay and apparently glazed, the thin delicate bowls and vases bear a remarkable similarity to the black household ware now so fashionable.

"They belong to a period earlier than that hitherto known as prehistoric," Professor Sir Flinders Petrie explained to a "Daily Chronicle" representative. "So far as can be judged, their date is about 10,000 years before Christ.

"When they were made the potter's wheel was not known, and they were turned out entirely by the fingers and a sort of comb. Here, you see, we have a broken piece of one of the combs used.

"The secret of their manufacture was lost, and although the pottery made in ancient Egypt thousands of years later is good, 'none of it is so beautiful as this.'

Other exhibits include some of the oldest bricks probably in the world. About 10,000 years old, they are made of Nile mud and wattle.

Painted on the ceiling of the tomb of King Uah-kara was found the pattern known as the "Greek key," but it was designed about 2,500 years before Greek civilization arose.

Copies of the paintings are shown at the exhibition, which remains open until July 26. Admission being free.

Packing Cases Holds Guns

(By Dominion News Service) LONDON, July 21.—By order of Scotland Yard officers, a number of cases consigned to an address at Amsterdam, and awaiting shipment at Brewer's Quay, London Docks have been retained at the Customs House.

The cases, which were marked as containing steel castings, actually hold machine-guns in parts, and police proceedings are to be taken under the Fire Arms Act against certain persons connected with the shipment.

Similar cases were shipped a short time ago from the same quay. They came from the garage at Wanstead, which was said to be the source of the consignments, and were similarly marked "steel castings."

Allegations that the contents of the cases were guns, and were really going to Russia by way of Amsterdam, came to the notice of Scotland Yard, who authorised a watch, when more cases turned up for export.

Watch was also kept on the garage at Wanstead, which was said to be the source of the consignments. The cases—ten of them, unusually large, made of wood an inch thick and iron-bound—were allowed to remain in the shed alongside the quay while observations were kept, and persons who came to see about them were immediately tackled by the detectives.

The cases were opened on Tuesday by the authorities. Inside each case was a zinc lining, and inside were found dismantled machine guns and their mountings. Altogether they would weigh about two tons.

The detectives kept a watch on the cases until yesterday, when the ship which was to have taken them to Amsterdam left the Thames.

The cases were not taken on board, but were handed over to the customs by the police.

A MYSTERY COCOANUT

(By Dominion News Service) LONDON, July 21.—The "Coco de Mer," or double coconut palm, will interest many visitors to the tropical house in Kew Gardens here this summer.

This palm, which in its native land reaches a height of between ninety and one hundred feet, has a strange and mysterious history. The double nut from which the palm rears its lofty head, was first picked up in the Indian Ocean about 1710 by a sailor, who, on landing in India, was told that it was a treasure of great worth, cast up from the bottom of the sea.

One or two of the curious nuts were brought ashore and fabulous stories concerning them were spread abroad, and the first shells brought to Europe were highly valued. A double nut, measuring twelve inches in diameter, was sold in 1720 for 150 guineas.

Thus the name "cocoanuts of the sea" had its origin. But alas! for the legends. In 1743 the discoverer of the Seychelle Islands in the Indian Ocean found the "coco de mer" growing there. The palm, in its native soil, has a slender stalk 12 in. to 15 in. in diameter, towers aloft to nearly 100 ft. and is surmounted by a crown of fan-like leaves, measuring 20 feet to 30 feet in length. One of its fruit weighs between 40 lb. and 50 lb.

Young leaves, cut into strips, are largely used for basket work and the shell of the nut, carved, polished and ornamented with silver, is made into bowls and drinking cups.

Captain Spins Yarn Of Cannibals On Tiny Island

(United Press) SAN PEDRO, Cal., July 21.—Deepwater skippers of Dollar "around-the-world" steamers are betting the reputation of being among the briny's most interesting yarn spinners.

First there came the "floating island" discovery, backed up by photographs. Now along saunters Captain Kenneth B. Lowry, master of the President Garfield, who tells a thrilling story of cannibals in the Indian Ocean.

It happened off the island of Bocosmuto, according to the captain. His ship was passing the little blotch of land in the dead of night en route to Suez and Port Said. Knowing there should be a light on the island, the Garfield's quartermaster called Lowry's attention to its absence.

"Rather than take a chance on our course," said the skipper, when the ship touched at its port of refuge, "we anchored for the night. In the morning we were putting heads outside to investigate the light's excuses for not showing, when we were shocked to see hundreds of naked savages, armed with spears, spring suddenly out of the jungles and run down to the shores.

Jap Boycott Of U. S. Goods Condemned

(United Press)

OSAKA, Japan, July 22.—Takahashi, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, voiced his disapproval of the Anti-American movement. The boycott, he says, is a favorite weapon with the Chinese people, and it brings economic disadvantages.

The boycott of American goods would not lead necessarily to the encouragement of domestic production. A wiser course would be to import what is profitable to be imported, while at the same time exporting home goods in as large quantities as possible. The people should strive to eschew luxurious habits. They must refrain from using luxuries, no matter whether they are of foreign make or Japanese. Among the luxuries imported is woolen yarn. The encouragement of knitting among Japanese women with a view to giving them employment was the cause of the importation of yarn. Last year, it was imported to the amount of 60,000,000 yen. In his opinion, waste silk or satins, or other substitute for woolen yarn can be found among domestic products as material for knitting, and it is desirable that a wider use of those substitutes should be encouraged.

The above view of M. Takahashi is approved by the Japanese press. It is true that anti-Americanism is enjoying increasing publicity in the Japanese press, which, however, express disapproval of the reckless ebullitions of sentiment which it reports from day to day. While condemning the attitude of the agitators as beneath the dignity of a great power, the Japanese editors direct special attention to the serious economic disadvantages of the boycott of American goods would entail upon Japan.

The Jiji says that it does not add to the reputation of Japan, as a great nation, to take lead out of the book of Chinese students and boycott American goods. Such a chivalrous action only tends to injure the Japanese cause and is least expected to promote a satisfactory solution of the Japanese-American problems. The Japanese people were absolutely in the right when they condemned American Congressmen for having allowed themselves to be carried away by momentary impulse, or influenced by party tactics, to pass the anti-Japanese legislation, but their case would be injured if they allowed their sentiment to get the better of their reason.

As has often been pointed out, the Jiji proceed, the injudicious action of the American Congress did not embody the true spirit of the American people, and it is to be expected that body will sooner or later recognize its mistake. The only way to attain a solution of the Japanese-American problem is, therefore, for and the Japanese people to handle it in a dispassionate manner. While continuing their strong protest to America, they must remain composed, scrupulously avoiding such deeds as may militate against the dignity of their protest.

The similar view was expressed by many other leading papers. They unanimously urge the Japanese people should refrain from any undesirable conduct prompted by momentary impulse. The boycott was agitated in many instances as a means to increase the profit for the home producer. For instance, the boycott against American films, was contemplated not as a protest against anti-Japanese movement in America, but as a protest against the too high royalties of American films, and it is particularly noteworthy that America is Japan's best customer. In return for the export of these luxuries she imports from American goods which are mostly necessities of life, such as iron and raw cotton. This fact clearly shows which side is destined to suffer in a larger measure from boycott movement.

But the papers are unanimous in deploring the lamentable situation which the prompt and mutually satisfactory settlement is needed, more than anything else for the maintenance of the friendly relations between America and Japan.

UNCLE TOBY ALARMED

After having been laid up for a very long time Uncle Tobias Feebles recovered sufficiently to be able to ride to town in his son-in-law's flivver. "But I was right sorry to see that they had had a terrible epidemic of typhoid fever—mighty high all the women folks had their hair cut off!"

Old Legend Traces White Indians To Roving Scotchmen

(United Press)

BARCELONA, July 22.—At the recent discovery of so-called "white Indians" on the isthmus of Panama by the Marsh expedition has been versed in the romantic lore of Central and South America.

An expedition of Scotsmen, some say, settled in Darien in the autumn of 1698, by authorization of the Scotch parliament. This expedition, numbering some 1200 persons, included four ministers of the Church of Scotland, who went along to establish a presbytery or organization, and it is told that because of their ascetic tendencies, some of the sturdy Scotch families rebelled against them, and were banished from the settlement.

Later, it is said, others of the settlers were driven away by the Spaniards, and it is thought likely many of them fled into the jungles and remained. This, if the supposition is correct, might account for the white Indians.

But the San Blas tribe of Indians have a different story. Many years ago, they say, so long ago that no one can recall the date, a band of white men came to Darien and set about to rob the red men of their wealth. In their exploitations, however, the pale face visitors incurred the displeasure of an evil spirit, and soon they died. These spirits, so the story goes, being accused, were driven into the fever-laden jungles, where they stayed forevermore. That is the legend of the San Blas tribe.

According to their oldest chiefs, no San Blas could intermarry with another race. That law still holds, and so strictly is it observed that even now a white man visiting their villages is carefully watched. But there are tales of Pocahontases even among the San Blas, and they say that some of the women of the tribe ran away with pale face men, whom they married, only to be slain later or their babies killed a few days after birth.

It is thought improbable by one.

LOOP-LOOPER IS KILLED

(By Dominion News Service)

NEW ORLEANS, July 22.—To circus here, a performer who was to "loop the loop" on a motorcycle over a long wooden track was willing to go through his turn because of the risk of skidding off the rail.

When the impresario explained this, the audience clamoured for the whole programme.

So the cyclist, Morris Albins, Frenchman, to save the face of the impresario, decided to take the risk.

At the bottom of the slope the motorcycle slipped off the track and dashed against a tree, where it was smashed.

Albins was killed, and several spectators were carried off unconscious.
