Aviation In France At A Standstill

Gov't Seeking to Liquidate Its Large Fleet of Airships Left From War

7,000 AIRPLANES REMAIN ON HANDS

Has Appropriated Large Subsidy to Encourage Private Companies in Aviation

PARIS, Sept. 12.—Aviation in France is at a standstill according to Captain Rene Fonck, France's greatest ace, new deputy in charge of aeronautics in the Chamber, and there will be no change in the situation until the government has liquidated the large fleet of aeroplanes left over from the war.

Captain Fonck downed 126 German planes, the official records of the army credit him with 75, the number which he brought down within the French lines. He fought over 500 air duels, and totalled 2,500 hours' flight during his war service. He has been decorated by almost all the allied governments and is a grand officer of the Legion of Honor.

"The government was left with 7,000 army planes on its hands when the armistice was signed," Captain Fonck said. "In addition to this Germany delivered 3,000 planes to us. Until we liquidate the war stock there will be little chance for recovery in the building line. Our factories could not keep going if it was not for foreign orders.

"Our army aerial appropriations for 1922 is 300,000,000 francs. In addition to this the government has appropriated 40,000,000 francs as a subsidy for private companies to encourage the development of civil aviation. Without this subsidy the companies could not operate.

"We are handicapped in France by short distances, a two hour flight lands us in London or Brussels, five hours takes us into Italy. In the United States there are wonderful possibilities for cross-country flying."

Captain Fonck expects to sail for the United States in October to study aviation conditions.

CHEMISTS IN CONFERENCE

Gr. Britain and Canada Represented at N. Y. Convention.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—Noted chemists from Great Britain and Canada assembled today with members of the American Chemical Society for an international conference on postwar chemistry in all branches.

The British delegation, about 550 strong, arrived this morning from Montreal, where they have been attending sessions of the Society of Chemical Industry of Great Britain. The British contingent was headed by Sir William Pope, knighted for his work in poison gases during the war. More than 5,000 United States chemists are expected to attend sessions of the convention, which continues through September 10, the registration bureau announced.

The dye industry and use of poison gases in warfare are two of the most important questions to come before the convention, which will concern itself largely with a discussion of how to increase the world's productivity to make up for losses during the war.

A HIGHLAND WELCOME

The following was an "improvisation" uttered one day in Sept. 1875 by Robert Burns (1759-1796), the celebrated Scottish poet when he was being hospitably entertained at a place about 11 miles to the north of Blair Athole, called Dalnacardoch in the Perthshire Highlands:

When death's dark stream I ferry o'er

A time that surely shall come— In Heaven itself I'll ask no more than just a Highland welcome!

Soon the mermaids will begin to flirt with the ocean swells

A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XIX.

Unpleasant days followed, days in which the nights and mornings were spent by Marcia grumbling because she couldn't have the larger better apartment, and by John in trying to show her it was impossible. For the first time he welcomed the diversion that guests brought, or that resulted from their going to the theatre, or elsewhere.

The morning post brought Marcia a letter from her mother. "That's nice," she will be company for you."

John Aldrich really did not know his mother-in-law at all. His courtship had been done mostly by letter, except for the one long visit he had made in the town when the bag met Marcia, and when Marcia was away visiting a sister who was ill. Marcia's mother had impressed John as a cold, dictatorial sort of a woman, but she was Marcia's mother and so was entitled to every consideration.

Then, John thought he would be relieved of much that had become irksome if Marcia had company. Perhaps her mother would accompany her when she wished to go out and he would be excused. The thought was welcome. He needed the rest. He had lagged a bit lately in his work. It would give him time to catch up.

But his relief was short-lived. Marcia was a flutter of anticipation. She was determined to have every thing in perfect order for her mother. When John urged to take things more quietly she replied, "Oh, I couldn't think of having my mother come if everything wasn't just perfect. She is awfully critical. And, John, don't fail to put on your dinner jacket every night, and for heaven's sake don't talk about economy, or go to the other extreme and talk of extravagance. I want mother's visit to be the nicest thing that ever happened to her. She says she isn't very well, and the doctor thinks it will do her good."

"I sincerely hope it will," John replied, but without enthusiasm. Marcia's long speech had taken away any hope he had of being more comfortable because of Mrs. Vane's visit. In fact it had made him almost wish she wasn't coming. He did wish it after Marcia's next remark.

"It is terribly mortifying to have to put mother in that tiny guest room. She is accustomed to a big sunny room at home. I knew something would happen to mortify me if you didn't take that other apartment! But I have ordered new furniture for the room, and have done all I can so that it won't look too poverty stricken."

"I thought it very comfortable as it was," John said, realizing that furniture was very expensive, and that Marcia was a very vain woman. "Well it wasn't! The chair was fifty-six dollars, and the draperies twenty. I sent the bill to you. Of course you don't expect to me furnish the house out of my allowance," she added as she noted the frown on John's face.

"No, I do not expect you to furnish the house, but I considered it furnished well enough."

"If it had been your mother coming, instead of mine, you probably would not have made that kind speech," Marcia retorted in a haughty and I hope you aren't going to draw a long face every time I want to do something for her entertainment. She loves bridge, and the theatre. We must give several parties for her. I am very proud of my mother. She is so handsome, so the grand dame."

"So I remember her. Too much the grand dame, he feared, but he made no reply. Time enough to cross a bridge when he came to it—especially with Marcia. She gave him worries enough as they went along.

"Why don't you say something?" she demanded after a moment. "I suppose you don't approve of my doing anything to entertain my mother!"

"Do what you like, but for God's sake don't use that tone with me," John burst out. "One would think you the most abused woman in Christendom."

"Get angry, just as you always do if I say a word. If I didn't love you it wouldn't hurt me so much, but—"

Hints for the Motorist

By Albert L. Clough Editor Motor Service Review of Reviews

Copyright, 1921, by the International Syndicate

The Much-Abused Spare Tube

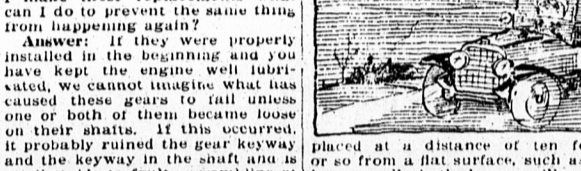

Many Never See Service, Being Ruined By Neglect

EARLY EVERY MOTORIST CARRIES one or more extra inner tubes, even if his "ready flated" tire and rim equipment is ample. Oftentimes, these reserve tubes are not required for months at a time and the feds somewhere about the car, but when they are wanted, they are usually wanted badly and too often are then found in unserviceable condition, through neglect. Spare tube should be kept in one of the oilproof enamel-cloth bags, specially made for this purpose and not loose in the toolbox or under the seat and they should be properly folded and well covered with talc powder. In order to forestall disappointments the tubes selected as "standbys" and their valves—unless they are brand new—should be tested by inflating them fully and leaving them remain in that condition overnight, to make sure they are perfectly tight. The proper method of folding is as follows: Remove the valve-plunger and, beginning at the point opposite the stem, roll it into a tight ball, to remove all the air, replacing the valve-plunger and cap, while it is still rolled, then lay it flat on a table with the valve stem in the middle and pointing up. Fold each half once, centrally toward the valve-stem and bring both folded halves together, with the valve-stem lying between them, which will make a compact bundle of eight thicknesses of tube, with the stem placed neatly within it, then slip a rubber band around each end of the bundle and stow it away, preferably in a side pocket or where it will not be subject to injury from heavy tools.

PREMATURELY WORN TIMING GEARS

T. M. J. writes: Although I have had my car but three months, my repairman claims that my timing gears are badly worn and out of adjustment. He says that the placement and that of the crankshaft in case the new gears do not make matters right. What can have been the reason for these gears being so soon? I have always kept all parts lubricated. If I make these replacements what can I do to prevent the same thing from happening again?

Answer: If they were properly installed in the beginning and you have kept the engine well lubricated, we cannot imagine what has caused these gears to fail unless one or both of them became loose on their shafts. If this occurred, it probably ruined the gear keyway and led his work to join Marcia in meeting her. Marcia declared it would show disrespect if he did not. She offered him her cheek to kiss, but relieved him considerably when she said on the way to the apartment:

"I suppose you have wondered how you would address me. You aren't young enough, nor I old enough, for you to call me mother. Mrs. Vane will suit me perfectly."

"Thank you," John had answered, with embarrassment, and had added to himself, "It suits me too, right down to the ground." Not that John was lacking in respect to his wife's mother. But he was rather overawed and welcomed the adjustment of what had been a worry to him ever since he knew Mrs. Vane was coming.

Sailor Could Not Read His Letter

So Bartender Told Him He Had Been Left 38,000,000 Francs

BAYONNE, France, Sept. 12.—A sailor called Lancelo Pourche, whose ship arrived at Dunkirk yesterday, calling at a cafe where he was a regular customer whenever he happened to strike the Flemish port, found a letter waiting from a lawyer in his home town. Lancelo Pourche can neither read nor write. Having several times turned the letter over and carefully examined it from all angles, he requested the bartender to read the contents aloud.

The letter began by announcing the death of Lancelo Pourche's uncle, Sicard, which occurred some time ago in South America. The uncle having emigrated to Argentina a longer time back than the sailor could remember, the news did not greatly grieve him. But when the bartender excitedly continued reading the lines, and announced that Uncle Sicard had left a fortune of 38,000,000 francs to Lancelo Pourche and a similar sum to the latter's sister, the stolid sailor showed a distinct sign of emotion.

Emptying his petit verre he ordered drinks all round. Then retaining control of himself, he remarked, "I will only believe it when I count the money myself." It appears that Uncle Sicard went farming, bought land and subsequently discovered a rich vein, amassing a large fortune.

Never climb a mountain till you come to it—then maybe it won't be there.

St. John's Man Is Surprised

SNOW WORRIED OVER WIFE'S CONDITION. SHE'S NOW LIKE A DIFFERENT WOMAN.

"I had no idea a medicine could do what Tanlac has done for my wife, for she is just like a different woman now," said William A. Snow, Waterfordbridge Road, St. John's, N. F.

"She had been having attacks of indigestion after almost every meal for over a year. She had bilious spells too, and her complexion was dull and sallow. Her nerves finally gave way and she got little rest day or night. I was very much worried about her as I didn't know which way to turn to find relief for her."

"It certainly was a big surprise to me the way Tanlac helped her. She has a splendid appetite, and is able to eat anything without having the slightest distress after-wards, and she is gaining weight and strength every day. Her complexion has cleared up and she looks like another person. Her nerves have quieted down too, and she sleeps peacefully all night long and gets up in the morning bright and cheerful."

Tanlac is sold in Charlottetown by Reddin Bros., and all leading druggists everywhere.

"CAVE MAN" WAS FOOLED

CHICAGO, Sept. 12.—Sam Lombardo spent Labor Day in a cell at the Austin police station after learning the wisdom of the proverb "Look before you leap." Sam didn't look before he kidnapped a beautiful girl last night when Rosa Lucchesi, 21, her sister, Antonina, and her parents Mr. and Mrs. Ciralama Lucchesi 856 N. Lawndale avenue, were returning from an engagement party. He is not only in jail, but he is brideless as well.

It was three a. m., and the street lights were not as bright as Sam would have liked. According to the charges against him, he, his brothers Tony and Joseph and a brother-in-law, who is being sought, were waiting in a machine at the alley near the Lucchesi home. The family approached. Sam jumped out, knocked down five or six excited relatives and carried off what he thought was his unwilling love. In the excitement the driver started the car too soon and the girl's foot was run over. About Berwyne street, Sam lit a match. "Holy Cow" (or words to that effect), "Cave Man" Sam said disgustedly, "I got the wrong girl," and he brought Antonina, Rosa's twenty-four-year-old sister, back home.

"Now I'll never marry him," the dark eyed Rosa said today "How he must love me, not to know me from my sister."

"If he had taken me who knows? I might have got tired of arguing and gone with him. But now, all the way to Berwyne and he didn't know it was not I who rode beside him. Bah! I had him arrested. The next time he will look closer or I'll ask the judge to give him thirty days."

Sam and his brothers, Tony and Joseph, have been identified and are being held.
