Nazis Attack In

Tonight's communique said: "The situation in Holland has improved today. British aviation is giving vigorous help to the Dutch defence."

"Enemy pressure continues in Belgium, to the west of Maastrecht, and in the region of Tongeren. It is strongly hoped, however, by the activity of Allied airplanes attacking bridges in the Maastrecht region and enemy columns which have suffered heavy losses."

"The advance of our troops continues regularly in the central part of Belgium."

"Nothing of importance to report on the eastern part of the front between the Saar and the Swiss front."

"The German aviation has been very active notably over northeastern France. French anti-aircraft defence and Allied airplanes have combated this activity. Thirty enemy airplanes were shot down during the day. It is to be noted that among German airplanes destroyed Friday and Saturday, 30 were shot down by our anti-aircraft artillery."

Little Enemy Successes Renewed Nazi assaults were reported to have met little success in south Belgium, where French military quarters said a strong force was pushing westward from the Grand Dunes of Luxembourg toward the Belgian town of Neufchateau, on a railway.

The Germans have reported that the Duchy of Luxembourg "is in German hands."

The French said French troops driving into the Duchy caused heavy losses Saturday to German attacking forces.

French and British units are speeding north to the assistance of their besieged allies.

One French military commentator said the latest operation being carried out on schedule despite German aerial attacks.

Paris newspapers reported that German planes dropped 100 bombs in the Nancy region Saturday. Eleven other French towns were raided and the civilian air toll amounted to 148 killed and 337 wounded since the blitzkrieg started Friday.

West Front Action In the western front, fighting was general along the entire salient where the French outposts are fortified from line are backed up by the underground fortresses of the main Maginot line.

Infantry and trench mortar fire was strong in the regions of Forbach, Sarrebourg and Biche, with continuing attacks by an undetermined number of German troops.

The high command morning communique text follows: "In the region of the Albert canal and the Meuse (Maas) River, where German attacks continued with extreme violence, our aviation massively and effectively intervened in support of Belgian troops."

"Towards the end of the day our bombers attacked enemy columns and bridges of the greatest importance. Eight enemy planes were brought down during these expeditions."

"Numerous aerial operations were carried out during the night, the results of which are not yet known."

"On land, our approach operations continued normally according to plan."

"In the region of the Saar and west of the Vosges, where in the latter part of the night fighting continued with extreme violence, German artillery opened violent and continuous fire."

The French took added precautions against enemy "loops," broadcasting warnings to the population.

Belgians Retire Methodically In Luxembourg Province, he said, heavy German forces have attacked the east bank of the Meuse (Maas) and Belgian troops are retiring methodically.

The German Ambassador and his staff left Belgium last night. Refugees streamed out of Brussels Saturday in private automobiles, trucks, carts and on bicycles.

Brussels railway stations were crowded with masses of wounded soldiers.

Many areas of the city are reported to be on the watch for such landings in the interior.

Three air alarms were sounded in northeast France and one in central France but they were without incident.

At Metz, anti-aircraft batteries brought down an enemy plane. The crew of four bailed out. One was arrested but the other three disappeared.

HARASS (Continued from page 1) yesterday (Saturday) afternoon by a series of attacks made by aircraft of the Royal Air Force.

Roads leading out of Maastrecht (Holland-Belgian border) were bombed, and a few miles southeast of town on the road of Tongeren (Belgium) a column of small tanks, armored cars and troop transport vehicles was attacked and several direct hits obtained.

The Seal was the eighth British submarine lost in the war. A statement said: "The Secretary of the Admiralty regrets to announce that His Majesty's submarine Seal is overdue and must be presumed to be lost. Foreign reports suggest that some of her crew may be prisoners of war. Next of kin have been informed."

GERMANS FLANK

"A French counter-attack against the enemy motorized units was successful," it said. "A great number of enemy tanks was destroyed."

"One attempt to cross the (Albert) canal by means of Pack boats failed owing to the fire of our defence," the communique said.

It was not reported where this attempt was repulsed but the Germans already had crossed the canal, Belgium's first line of defence at least at Maastrecht and perhaps elsewhere.

The advance unit which pushed to the southwest from Maastrecht through Tongres (Tongren) to Waremmé had crossed the canal in the Maastrecht sector.

Premier Pierlot said the advance unit had fought its way through Tongres despite fierce resistance and in the evening were standing near Waremmé.

Belgian Capital Bombed Pierlot's war report was punctuated by the shriek of an air raid alarm. The Belgian capital had been attacked six times from the air during the morning before he spoke and in Louvain, the east of Brussels, air alarms came every 10 minutes.

Antwerp was heavily attacked from the air Saturday and a large number of casualties was reported.

New masses of parachute troops were dropped during the day, many carrying dummies to throw the defenders off their guard. They also carried miniature radios.

Although they were up in the air, the Belgian people were called upon to give blood for transfusions as military and civilian casualties mounted.

In what he called a frank and truthful account of the military situation, Premier Pierlot said the Germans were unable to penetrate on any considerable scale Friday, when the blitzkrieg began, because of "thorough demolitions immediately carried out."

Germans Cross Albert Canal Saturday, he said, the Germans crossed the Albert Canal. The officer in charge of the defence of two bridges near Maastrecht was killed by an aerial bomb and the second in command hesitated to carry out the pre-arranged orders.

During the interval, Pierlot said, German motorized units streamed across the bridges.

Later, a Belgian officer in a suicide dash through the German lines blew up himself and one bridge.

Across the other, Pierlot added, the Germans attacked "with an enormous mass of tanks and aircraft."

The Germans then advanced to Tongeren despite fierce resistance and "in the evening the German elements were standing near Waremmé."

Enemy Stopped "When the enemy reached our troops in their new positions, they were stopped," he said. "The Premier added that the latest report showed the Germans had 'no further north we are resisting successfully.' Pierlot declared, 'In spite of many attacks against the fortifications of Liege the enemy is unable to make any advance.'"

The Germans have claimed the capture of two forts in the chain of defending Liege.

The Premier said that parachute troops dropped by the Germans are being rounded up and hunted down.

The movement of British and French troops coming to the aid of Belgium "is proceeding normally," Pierlot asserted.

"For obvious reasons I must confine myself to the statement that their advance is very satisfactory."

A noon communique issued by the Premier said the defenders were opposing the Germans with "energetic resistance," continuing to defend "step by step positions assigned to them by the operations plan."

This communique also said the enemy force "which entered our defence lines did not achieve any important aim. In many places groups of parachutists have been annihilated. Many enemy planes have been brought down."

Pierlot in his report said 100 German planes had been shot down Saturday.

END SURVEY OF MIGRATORY GAME BIRDS

Messrs. Clarence Aldous and Howard Mendall of the Biology Department of the University of Maine, and Joseph S. Stickney, director of Maine's fish and game department, have finished a two-day survey of the migratory game birds in the Province and leave this morning for Fredericton to conduct a survey there.
