THE WOMAN HE MARRIED

BY JANÉ PHELPS

NAN HAS A WINDFALL.

Chapter 46.

Well Nan, I have taken a flyer! A mighty small one, but if it turns out right it will help a little."

"A flyer?" I asked, not comprehending.

"Yes, I bought a little cotton."

"Oh, goody!"

"Don't goody until I sell it. I may lose."

"Oh, no you won't!"

"I hope not. And Nan, I look the house money to use as bargain."

I couldn't bring myself to borrow, and so the tradesman can't be paid cash this month. We've been pretty good customers so they won't kick at giving us a little credit."

Then, "I did it for you Nan. I want you to be happier than you have seemed lately, and as it appears to be the lack of money that worries you, I've made up my mind to take a chance."

"What you should have done long ago," I said sharply. I knew the tradesman would not give me further credit without kicking, as Dick expressed it; that they would make things very unpleasant for me unless I paid them something substantial on account. Then I had promised Clara to return the money she had loaned me. Anxiously I asked:

"When will you sell?" And may I have the first profit?"

"If it goes my way I shall not wait for a big profit. And if I give it to you, how am I ever going to try again. I thought that if I made anything I would try and use only profits and so not have to ask for credit because of usip my salary."

"But if you only make a little?"

"Great sales from little accorns grow," he mused. But he showed no real enthusiasm, and it made me afraid that we might perhaps lose instead of winning.

Would to God we had!

The next few days were not happy ones. Dick studied the financial sheet the entire evening, and I worried over my debt to Clara, and the house bills.

The second of the month came, cotton field steady, that was all. The grocer had called me on the telephone and almost demanded his pay.

I felt a little as I worked about the house—not because of the debts, or because I felt at all guilty; my sense of right and wrong was honest—but I wept because I was without money to satisfy those I owed.

Dick might have saved me all this annoyance. With the first of men at least, it had ceased to be an embarrassment and in only three short years. When I was first married I did not believe in running in debt, and was happy with what Dick could do for me. It was simply aging others, allowing my foolish love of clothes and show to blind me, yes to obliterate my most important interest.

Then there came a miracle. At least it seemed so to me.

"I am a lucky person!" I said over and over as I read Mother's letter. A distant cousin of hers had died and had left her $2,000 and me $500. The check was enclosed.

Dick and I cried! Then came the thought that had I not owed so much we might have used it to make more money. It would take the greater part of it now to pay the grocer and butcher and Clara. I never gave the debt I owed Mrs. Stowell a thought. She had said I was not to worry. She didn't need it, and I was to take all the time I wanted to pay her.

I rushed down to Clara with the news. She was delighted. Yet she said rather cross also.

"You haven't told me a thing yet!" she complained.

"I will now that we have a little to use. Dick will have to tell me because it is my money," I evaded.

Clara went to the bank with me and I deposited it and for the first time in my life owned a check book.

"I'll pay you tomorrow, Clara. I don't want to know I borrowed of you. He thinks I still owe the dressmaker. I didn't say he thought I owed $75."

Although I was entangled in a perfect maze of debt and debt, I sang gleefully all the afternoon and could hardly wait for Dick to come home to show him mother's letter and my bank book.

Tomorrow—Nan Disregards Dick's Advice.

NORTH, WILTSHIRE SCHOOL

The public examination of the North Wiltshire school was held on the afternoon of Thursday, Dec. 23rd. Although the weather was very disagreeable, quite a large number of visitors were present.

This school is a large one and has always sought to maintain a high standard of excellence and this year's work thus far has been equal to that of other years.

The teacher, Miss Helen McKinnon, examined the different classes in the various branches; reading, spelling, arithmetic, history, geography and grammar and the more advanced scholars in French as well.

The pupils acquitted themselves splendidly and showed clearly that the training given them in school had been thorough. But while the scholars all did well and showed that both they and the teacher had been hard at work, what impressed the visitors most was the excellent method the teacher had of carrying on her work. She undoubtedly has the faculty of keeping the whole school interested in their work at once. While she was hearing one class all of the rest of the scholars were doing their work as though there was no class being heard or anything else to take away their attention.

After the classes were heard some of the visitors among them L. H. Jenkins, John T. Godfrey, William Coady and Florrie McLean made speeches.

Mr. L. H. Jenkins, who has always taken a great interest in educational matters spoke in glowing terms of the work being done by both teacher and scholars. He appealed to the scholars to try to appreciate the privilege of having such an efficient and painstaking teacher and to do all in their power to make school life pleasant and profitable both for themselves and their teacher. Before closing his address Mr. Jenkins offered two prizes to the scholars to be given at the June examination, one for best attendance, the other for the best all round scholar.

For this very generous offer—as well as for his deep interest in the work of the school as shown in other ways. Mr. Jenkins has the sincere gratitude of both pupils and parents.

The next to speak was John L. Godfrey one of the school trustees. Mr. Godfrey expressed himself as being highly pleased with the work being done in the school. He spoke particularly of Miss McKinnon's excellent method of teaching.

After the speech making was over the children and visitors were given a generous treat of candy, nuts and apples.
