Vaccines For Infantile Paralysis

By Howard W. Blakeslee, Associated Press Science Editor (By Clarendon's Special Wire) MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 9.-The safety of one of the two infantile paralysis vaccines now in use, and the protective powers of the other, were challenged by two medical authorities and defended by their developers today at the American Public Health Association.

Within the past year about 20,000 persons, mostly children, have been vaccinated with the two substances, both made from the bodies of the virus, or "agent," which causes infantile paralysis.

The challenges were issued on a program arranged to bring officially before American health authorities the problems involved in testing these vaccines on a large scale on human beings. The paralysis program was used by the laboratory section of the Association, with four speakers.

Two were the authors of the vaccines, respectively Dr. John A. Kolmer of Philadelphia, and Dr. Maurice Brodie, formerly of Ottawa and Montreal and now carrying on research in New York. Officially appointed to discuss their two reports were Thomas M. Rivers, of the Rockefeller Institute, New York, and Dr. James P. Leake, one of the leading surgeons of the U. S. Public Health Service, Washington.

Dr. Rivers and Leake both asserted they doubted the safety of the Kolmer vaccine. The doubts were based, they said, on the fact that eight out of about 13,000 persons vaccinated with the Kolmer vaccine have come down with infantile paralysis.

Dr. Rivers said the Brodie vaccine apparently is safe from causing infantile paralysis. But he added there was no evidence of its efficacy in preventing infantile paralysis. He said Dr. Brodie ought to continue by safe methods, until the vaccine had been tried on 100,000 persons.

Dr. Kolmer's vaccine is living infantile paralysis virus, "attenuated" or partly weakened, until it should no longer be dangerous. Dr. Brodie's virus is made of virus presumably completely killed.

Both viruses are obtained from the spinal cords of monkeys having infantile paralysis. The virus extracted, by two different methods.

In 1792, Rouget de l'Isle was doing garrison duty in Strasbourg; in his leisure hours, he amused himself with poetry and music. He wrote other things, but the Marseillaise alone gives him immortality.

Clarendon Home For Long Leave

(By Thomas T. Champion) (Canadian Press Staff Writer) LONDON, Oct. 9.-While Canada and Australia are both preparing to welcome a new Governor-General, Lord Clarendon, Governor-General of South Africa, is in England on six months leave.

Lord Clarendon is the fifth representative of the King since the union of South Africa was established in 1910. He assumed office early in 1931. His appointment was the choice of Premier J. B. M. Hertzog, who had rejected a suggestion from a section of the Dutch Nationalists that a South African should be appointed. General Hertzog maintained that it would be impossible to find any such person who was sufficiently free from political bias.

For some years Lord Clarendon, who is 58 years old, was a fruit farmer near Pickering, Ont. Returning to England he was prominently associated with the Overseas Settlement Committee, and later was for a time Chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Since his succession to the Earldom in 1914 he has sold much of his real estate in England, but nevertheless remains a considerable landowner. The Clarendon estate in Warwickshire includes the picturesque ruins of Kenilworth Castle, which has been a family possession since the restoration of Charles II. Lady Clarendon is daughter of the late Somers Coombs and sister of the sixth Baron Somers.

When Lord Clarendon was appointed to office in South Africa the King approved of his flying a special flag symbolic of that position. It consists of a blue ground bearing the Royal crest in gold with the words "Union of South Africa" above the crest and "Unie van Suid-Afrika" below.

The Flag Bill was the subject of bitter controversy in South Africa some years ago, when the Nationalists demanded a new flag for the Union, which should take the place of the Union Jack, and express something of Afrikaner history, and specially of the old Republics.

In the end a place was found in the new national flag for the Union Jack to symbolize the Empire sentiment felt by a large section of South Africans.

Sale Signs out For Famous Seal

(By The Canadian Press) LONDON, Oct. 9 - Negotiations are proceeding for the sale of Hackwood House, Hampshire, which has been in the Bolton family of which Lord Bolton is the head, for 400 years.

The Hackwood House estate is the site of the original home of Bolton family ancestors one of whom, after the Norman conquest became possessed of manors in Hampshire. At one period the family residence was Basing House, which was razed by Oliver Cromwell. Excavations showed that a building larger than the Tower of London once stood on the site.

Hackwood House is one of the finest country seats in Hampshire. The projected sale of the property recalls certain remarks made by Lord Bolton in 1931 at Leeds. "I should not be surprised," he said, "if the man is already born who, as the last owner of a big estate, will have an honored place in the British Museum." He then referred to what he termed the "glorious ingenuity of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his myrmidons" in extracting every possible farthing in taxes out of the land.

Britain Booms In Boy Births

(Canadian Press) LONDON, Oct. 9.-The sudden jump in the number of boy babies born in England and Wales affords matter for interesting speculation amongst those dealing with vital statistics. During the second quarter of this year 1,057 baby boys were born to every 1,000 girls. The last census showed there were 1,670 more women in this country than men. Since the War the excess of male births has been more marked than during the previous 40 years. The theory is widely held that this increase is an effort of nature to repair War wastage. Another curious fact is that some parts of the country produce more boys than others.

Wife an Angel In Three Ways

(Canadian Press) TORONTO, Oct. 9.-A popular Toronto clergyman has been telling this one at wedding breakfasts: George was a bit reserved and before marriage nobody ever heard him use terms of endearment for his fiancée. His friends picked up their ears when three or four months after the ceremony he started calling her "angel."

Generally it was easy for the clerical story-teller to get away with it but at one post-wedding feast up rose a sophisticated matron-of-honor. "There's a companion story to that of our reverend guest," she said, "I know a bridegroom who began by calling his wife 'kitten' but after a week or two he was compelled to quit it, the kitten having got its eyes opened."

Dress Die-Hards Challenge Turks

(By The Canadian Press) ANKARA, Turkey, Oct. 9.-A curious form of silent revolt by middle aged Turkish women who are reluctant to abandon the old-style Moslem dress has attracted the attention of authorities in Turkey. Groups of six or eight women, clad in the old-style harem dress known as the "Tcharchak", a one-piece black head-to-toe covering, with an impenetrable black veil, can be seen parading Anteria and other cities. Their action is regarded as a protest against the adoption of modern European dress in Turkey.

FRANCE HONORS NATION'S SONG

(By The Canadian Press) STRASBOURG, France, Oct. 9.-Although the event is seven years distant, Strasbourg and France are preparing to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the Marseillaise, the French national anthem in 1842. Pre-celebration will be held next year, which marks the 100th anniversary of the death of Claude Joseph Rouget de l'Isle, French officer who wrote both words and music of the stirring call to arms. He was born in Lons-le-Saunier, in the Jura mountains, in 1760, and died in Choisy-le-Roi, near Paris, in 1836.

Although his hymn electrified France and enthused the repulsing of the foreign invader, Rouget de l'Isle lived long in obscurity and even poverty. His declining years, however, were peaceful and happy, with a pension given him by Louis-Philippe.

By an accident the Marseillaise is mis-named. It should be called the "Hymne de Strasbourg" for it was not born in Marseille but in the Alsatian city on the Rhine. In deed, Strasbourg has named one of the principal thoroughfares the Avenue de la Marseillaise. Unfortunately, the mayor's residence, where it was first sung, has disappeared.
