Easter Lilies
Coaxing strong well-matured bulbs of Easter lily to unfold their deep snowy trumpets in time for the Easter season is an indoor garden adventure which may be started as late as about Dec. 1. Just to add interest to such an experiment, it may be said that Easter lily bulbs, as one of their own special peculiarities, vary greatly in the length of time required to come into flower, even when the bulbs are of exactly the same size and apparently of exactly the same degree of maturity. To offset this cancy habit it may be added that some of them, as reported by numbers of garden readers, if allowed to spend the summer in the pot, plunged deeply in cool earth in a sheltered part of the garden where they are not disturbed, will give a second crop of flowers in the fall, after blooming for Easter.

Well-matured bulbs of from three to five inches in circumference, if grown in a five-inch pot, will give from 1 to 3 flowers each, though for more showy effects three or four bulbs may be preferred in an eight to ten-inch pot. They do not take kindly to being overcrowded. Where the ten-inch pot is used, set the bulbs on top of five inches of loose soil, if possible placing each bulb on a little mound of sand. Cover lightly, water, and set away in the dark in a low temperature not freezing) to make roots. This usually requires about six weeks and is indicated by the stalk getting started.

Any good garden loam, provided with good drainage, made with a few pieces of broken crock, placed in the bottom of the pot, will serve these bulbs, though best results are probably to be had from a very rich light sandy loam well mixed with one-third its bulk of fine old rotted cow manure.

To give the new roots their quickest and best start, make sure the soil immediately under the bulb is loose. Cover the bulbs only about one inch with clean sand or sandy loam, and as the stem develops, add the sandy loam till the pot is filled to within half an inch of the top of the pot. The advantage of adding the soil gradually after the stalk is started, and the plant comes to the light, says one successful grower, is that roots that support the stalk normally develop above the bulb. Where no provision is made for their nourishment, a handicap is placed on the most vigorous stalk growth wanted for the best flowers.

Still another point to bear in mind is that exposing the top of the bulb to the action of the air, while roots should be the chief business of development, is likely to start the stalk into action before it has the necessary root support to go on its way to the finest flowering.

To shut out the air and light and save the moisture for the young roots, some of the most successful growers make use of two inches of coal ashes over bulb pots,

Clay, Senior Swine Grading Inspector, occupied the chair. Mr. F. M. Nash, District Poultry Promoter, on behalf of the gathering presented Mr. Baird with an engraved cigarette case and an address, in which reference was made to the very happy relations which had existed between him and his fellow workers during the time he spent in Charlottetown. Mr. Baird made a fitting and appreciative reply.

NEW HOCKEY CLUB—The newly-formed Hockey Club of Middleton are making great preparations for the season of 1932. New uniforms have been purchased, the colors being black on red, the stripes forming a very attractive pattern. A fairly strong team will take the ice in the new rink before the first of the year. Two or three additional players will be taken on before the regular games begin. Following are the players to date: Lloyd Bell, Neil Bradshaw, Austin Curtis, Jesse Bradshaw, Gilbert Bell, Ivan Bradshaw. Mr. Austin H. Curtis of Middleton is superintending the construction of a new open-air rink, which is almost completed and if weather conditions are favorable, will be in full swing for the holiday season. The ice surface is 170 ft. by 70 ft., and warm dressing-rooms, lighted by electricity will prove an attractive feature.

Vintage Ranks Among New Colors
Vintage is a new Summer color which comes to view with the smart things for southern wear that are arriving in Toronto. This new wine shade is the most outstanding departure from the white and color combinations which we say on a preliminary skirmish among the southern things in the shops yesterday.

Apparently there is nothing so hard to kill as a print. One would have thought a while ago that prints could not say another word; but they can. So far, the prints are concise, rather than luscious things, and appear chiefly as one piece, either jacket or blouse, of the light suit, combined with plain material.

White and red or white with rust red is leading, with white and green, white and blue, white and orange or tangerine following in favor. Silk crepes and rough crepes have somewhat shoved back the cottons, although embroidered batiste remains for fussy little frocks. We saw a delicious one of peach shade yesterday and linens will be extremely good.

A formal, sleeveless frock which has arrived is of white crepe, and the narrowest real Valenciennes lace suggests a yoke which flows gently over the top of the shoulder—a charming thing for the youthful person.

Fagoting traces the lines of several white frocks seen yesterday. One, worn with green rajah jacket, had a delicate rope of the green drawn through the fagotting. Another had a tomato red jacket, with little three-tiered cape effect topping the long sleeves.

The peasant pyjama is one of the most pleasing cotton things announced in New York. Printed calico makes them; the fitted bodice has a row of buttons down the front, and the full trousers are shorter than ankle length.

In dance frocks, very new, are those of spongy, diagonal cottons, pastel pique, or Liberty prints, made on the lines of real evening gowns.

Monk's cloth is used for beach trousers.

The most sensational question at the moment is whether those scanty bathing costumes will survive Florida favor to be seen north next Summer. They are much "less" than anything worn before, some consisting merely of abbreviated trunks and separate brassiere.

Nubby weaves, imitating hand-woven things, are used in bathing suits. Bright shares are popular, but it is expected that there will be many white bathing suits since Fashion has devised weaves heavy enough to make this possible. In some cases the white suit is lined, and in this way enables one to have that delightful combination of tanned skin and white.

Buys 20 Frocks Wear Two
LONDON, Dec. 22.—"When I go shopping I am generally in a hurry, order ten or twenty frocks, find that I can only wear two of them, and give the rest away!"

So spoke the wealthy Lady Cunard, when she commented yesterday on Mr. Justice McCardie's criticism of women who spend too much on clothes. She agreed with the bachelor Judge's views.

"I have not the faintest idea how much I spend on clothes every year," Lady Cunard added. "It may run into thousands. I have never bothered to think about it."

"But that is because I do not have to bother about money. I have my own income. On the other hand, I know perfectly well that if I were not so well off I could dress equally well on, for instance, $1,500 or $2,000 a year."

One Out of Ten Suits
"When I want a hat I choose ten at a time. Sometimes more—again in a hurry. The result is that, when I go home and try them on in comfort, I find that nine of them do not suit me, and there is only one possible."

"You see I am being perfectly frank with you. I want to tell candidly why it is that so-called 'society' women spend so much on their clothes."

"It is not that the cost of each garment is so very large; it is simply that we won't be bothered."

"I will let you into a secret. Some of the best-dressed women in London today are the poorest. I know, for they are my friends. How do they do it? you ask. Careful buying and attention to their clothes afterwards."

"Every time a dress has been worn it must be taken off and cleaned and ironed. If one cannot afford a maid to do this, then the wearer must do it herself."

"Women who want to be well dressed on $2,000 a year will have no difficulty if they will only observe this simple rule; never buy more than two dresses at a time, and choose them with care."

"You see, they keep up to the standard of the wealthy women in this way—wealthy women who throw their money away on clothes which they don't wear."

Lady Cunard's husband, Sir Bache Cunard, a grandson of one of the founders of the Cunard Steamship Line, died in 1925.
