many countries opposed to dollar instability and it was unofficially pointed out in comment that one of the chief points of the Washington programme was stabilization as soon as practicable along the lines laid down in the resolution submitted Monday by Senator Key Pittman. Georges Bonnet, leader of the French representation in the outstanding address of the day before a sub-committee of the Monetary Commission, asked: "How can capital flow and confidence be restored if a country with sound finances and a balanced budget can be hard hit because near or distant countries have embarked on perilous courses of inflation or currency devaluation?"

Makes Appeal

The French Finance Minister made an impassioned plea for stabilization, asserting the entire social structure was threatened by inflation. While he did not name the United States, many delegates interpreted his remarks as an appeal to end dollar depreciation before France should be forced off the gold standard.

A succession of speakers pleaded for monetary stabilization as essential to restoration of confidence, including representatives of Italy, Switzerland, Poland, Norway, Germany, Rumania and Yugoslavia. The discussion arose during consideration of a British resolution calling for easy money and cheap credit policies.

Expresses Opinion

Alberto Beneduce, Italian delegate, asserted that a demand for credit must arise naturally, and added that, "to put one's faith in immediate measures for augmenting the volume of money and credit might lead to a speculative boom followed by an even worse slump." The American delegates continued to steer clear of the controversy although several of them were busy behind the scenes, particularly James M. Cox of Ohio and James F. Warburg, financial expert, who had an extended conference with Mr. MacDonald. This meeting gave rise to considerable speculation. Baron Palmstierna of Sweden lent considerable support to the British resolution, calling attention to the practical workings of managed currency in Sweden where some of the British suggestions are already in use for the control of the price level.

To Survey New Areas For Oyster Culture

Further progress in the rehabilitation of Prince Edward Island's oyster industry is anticipated as a result of the arrival here of Mr. H. A. Lynch, engineer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa, who passed through Summerside on Tuesday on his way to Bidford, Mr. Lynch will work in conjunction with Dr. Needler and will lay out new areas for oyster culture in that vicinity. Previously Mr. Lynch was working at Kedgemakooke Lake, Nova Scotia, in connection with the rehabilitation of trout streams. He was with the late Mr. J. J. Gaudet, of Summerside, on the day of his fatal illness, and when in Summerside on Tuesday called on Mrs. Gaudet.

And finally came lobby gossip of political moves to unite Austria with Hungary. The Little Entente and the countries which benefited from the break-up of the Austrian Empire rang with indignation over what they termed attempts to make a new map of Europe. Some of the more indignant said it would mean war. Through all this turmoil the Conference activities moved slowly ahead. Progress on the financial side was practically halted pending the arrival of Prof Raymond Moley Assistant Secretary of State, with a more definite idea of United States policy. On the economic side however efforts turned towards producers agreements which while limiting production would stimulate increased consumption; the conclusion of a series of bilateral or regional trade agreements.

JOIN TARIFF TRUCE

And more countries have acceded to the temporary tariff truce, some with reservations and some without. The Union of South Africa joined provided it will be generally accepted by all states, members of the League and non-members alike. represented at the conference, and provided also that the truce will not apply to duties levied entirely for revenue purposes. Greece urges the necessity of concluding special commercial treaties between the great creditor states and small debtor countries with the object of facilitating imports of certain products from the debtor countries at specially reduced tariffs. The Greek delegation considers "such an increase of exports to the creditor countries would ensure the proper service of external debts which at the present moment meets with almost insurmountable transfer difficulties. As these commercial agreements bear upon a restricted portion of the total external trade they might be based upon reduced import duties outside the framework of the customs policy of each country, and of the existing quota systems."

In him rare gifts and rare goodness met and greeted each other. New Hall

The new hall is a splendid building about 74 feet in length by 32 feet in width. A fine stage has been erected in the front, and the floors are of polished hardwood. Some interior finishing remains to be done, and it is planned to make some additions to the hall to the rear of the stage. At 7.30 p. m. the war veterans of the Mount Stewart branch of the Canadian Legion, headed by the Legion Band paraded through the village. The programme followed.

Remembrance of Acquaintances

Rev. Father Rooney spoke of the necessity of remembering old acquaintances, and of fostering community spirit. He recalled the co-operation of football days, and regarded the opening ceremonies as the kick-off for a great game.

Better World

Rev. M. K. Charman in his address stated that he believed the day was past for merely remembering the fallen. They had died that the survivors might build a better world and a great deal might be accomplished by unity. He urged the people to get behind the boys of the Legion in their work. The erecting of the new hall, he stated, was the result of the work of Dr. Martin, to whom all credit was due.

Reconstruction in France

His Honour Judge Duffy related that several years ago he had lectured in Mount Stewart on community co-operation, and had made the suggestion that a debating society be formed. He had thought at the time that a new hall was desirable, and was glad to see that his hope had been realized. When he had visited France he had been struck by the remarkable work of reconstruction in the war zones, and had thought that the example was a worthy one. The speaker described vividly some of the battle fields of France. The graves of the soldiers in France were being given the greatest care, Judge Duffy stated in conclusion.

In giving expression to the thanks of the audience for the entertainment Fr. Rooney called for three cheers, which were given with a will. Following the entertainment the chairs were removed and a space for dancing provided. Festivities continued till a late hour, and concluded an enjoyable and memorable occasion.

Raps Commission Barred Mexican Dartmouth Fresco

NEW YORK, June 21—(C.P.)—Charging the National Commission to Advance American Art is "taking a regrettable course for the advancement of American art," by placing Dartmouth College on its "regret list" John Sloan, president of the Society of Independent Artists declared American artists are being brought "into justified contempt and ridicule." The action of the commission was prompted when Dartmouth employed the Mexican mural painter, Jose Clemente Orozco, to paint a fresco.

In furtherance of his condemnation of the commission, Mr. Sloan said Mexican artists "are the most purely and truly American artists, with the exception of our own Indians, who are now on this continent." "In my opinion," continued Mr. Sloan, "American art cannot be fostered by antagonizing even foreign art from Europe. I have my own 'regret list' of American artists. The roster of the National Academy of Design contains a large number of them and there are others. The purpose of my 'regret list' has been to call attention to mean, ignoble works and actions by self-seeking American self-styled 'artists,' which have a definite tendency to retard appreciation of native artists and bring their work into general contempt."

Powerful Hammer Smashes Atom

CHICAGO, June 21—The most powerful hammer yet devised for smashing the centres, or cores, of atoms, which are believed to hold the secret of how all matter is built, was described today before the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

This atom-smashing hammer is the deuterium, the infinitely small but enormously powerful core of the heavier of the two atoms of hydrogen, which is fired like a bullet into the cores of atoms that are to be smashed. Latest results of its use were reported by Dr. Gilbert N. Lewis, Mr. Stanley Livingston and Ernest O. Lawrence, all of the University of California.

They are using the deuterium's giant power to explore more deeply into the greatest mystery in the whole science of the study of the atom—the question of what the core of the atom is made of.

Firing deuterium into the cores of atoms of lithium with an energy of 1,300,000 volts, the California scientists succeeded in smashing the cores, and the fragments known as alpha particles flew off with an energy of 12,600,000 volts. This means that the scientists liberated far more energy from the lithium atoms' cores than was put into them by the impact of the deuterium, which is the kind of process that must take place if the energy of the atom is ever to be liberated on a practical, useable scale. Many scientists believe that vast energy is available inside the atom if it ever can be harnessed.

This liberation of energy, however, is not practical so far, because only one in perhaps 1,000,000 deuterium actually smashes the nucleus of a lithium atom. It is like shooting at a duck with a shotgun shell that contains 1,000,000 bullets, only one of which kills the duck. Scientists must learn to make every "shot" score a bull's-eye before they can liberate atomic energy on a practical scale.

Fibers in a piece of unstretched rubber are tangled up like a lot of angle-worms in a fisherman's bait can, but untangle themselves and lie side by side when the rubber is stretched, it was reported.

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 21.—A beer garden has been opened on top of Andrew Volstead's hotel, but the famous prohibition advocate declared last night he knew nothing about it because he hadn't gone up to investigate. "A beer garden on the roof?" exclaimed Volstead, when asked about it. "Well, you can't prove it by me; I've never been up there." Volstead, author of the famous Prohibition Act known as the Volstead law, now lives in the hotel, which has an exclusive patronage. Since leaving Congress, he has become legal adviser to the Northwesterly Prohibition Administration.

Montreal Market Declines

MONTREAL, June 21—(C.P.)—Despite a late rally which carried some of the leaders into higher territory, Montreal stock exchange listings declined during today's session. Turnover was of moderate proportions, approximately 24,500 shares changing hands.

The market was weak during the morning session and the lower trend continued until the last hour. In the final hour of trading stocks like International Nickel and Brazilian Tracton succeeded in registering gains but the upturn was of insufficient strength to seriously affect the balance of the list.
